Key Notes

Write Right

Thomas Ingmire, noted calligrapher and teacher, will give a free lecture and slide presentation of his work on Saturday, Nov. 5, 7:30 p.m., at the Minneapolis College of Art and Design auditorium, 220 E. 25th St. A former student of Donald Jackson, Mr. Ingmire works in San Francisco and currently teaches at the University of California at Berkeley. This event is sponsored by the Colleagues of Calligraphy.

Hymnspinners

The Hymnspinners, an instrumental and vocal quartet from Stillwater, will present a special program of Christmas music at 6:30 p.m., Sunday, December 4, at the St. Anthony Park United Methodist Church.

Poems and Songs

The St. Paul Music and Poetry Show (a COMPAS presentation) will be at Northwest Lutheran Seminary Theater on December 5 at 8 p.m. The show is free and open to the public and includes songs, old favorite poems, stories of old Minnesota, juggling, the words of Minnesota poets and songwriters being read and sung.

Starring on the Cover:

The Finns traditionally make straw ornaments like the star on this month's cover, designed and made by Martha Kortsmaki. Straw used to be draped over rafters as a reminder of the stable where Jesus was born. The star depicts the wise men being led to the stable by a star, and also symbolizes Jesus Christ as the light of the world. Read more about the Kortsmakis on page 3. Photo by Don Svendsen.

Boutique Kicked Off Holiday Season

By Martha Saul

Pollyanna was back in the Park last week. Pollyanna Boutique, that is.

Bootees, bibs, batik, bowls, pottery, stitchery, candles, tree trims, toys, candy, krumkake, baklava, rosettes, jams, jellies, and gingerbread men were some of the many quality items snapped up by avid shoppers from as far away as Willmar and Rochester, at the boutique on November 18 and 19.

The first Pollyanna Boutique, four years ago, was the brainchild of several Park women who decided putting on a boutique would be a good excuse to get together with friends and yet do something constructive.

This year, eleven women planned, publicized, scheduled and executed the boutique, including Sharon Bassett, Beth Cecchi, Marion Glew and Kikki Gore. They also sewed, knitted, wove, potted and baked their specialties for the boutique.

An additional 20 artists were asked to contribute their products to accent and complement those items made by the nuclear group. These additional artists are called the "Ten Per Centers" because they contribute ten per cent of their sales for the privilege of participating in the boutique.

The group chose the name Pollyanna because of its homespun quality. The women carry out this theme by wearing long skirts, frilly blouses and festive aprons, displaying their gifts on pine boughs and cherry red felt cloths and runners and playing Christmas carols for background music at the sale.

Everyone in the group is quick to agree that although the boutique involves a great deal of work, the joy of creating and working together is most satisfying. "Without the fun," Sharon said, "we wouldn't do it."

There are still some 1978 St. Anthony Park Calendars left! But please don't put it off! Buy several—for friends and relatives—before the New Year rolls around. At $3 apiece you can't go wrong. It's the right gift for everyone. Available at fine shops throughout the Park. December features the Gibbs kids (above), courtesy the Ramsey County Historical Society.

Council Actions

1. Voted to designate Bernice Flowers Strane District 12's representative to Como Park Planning Committee.
2. Learned about Merriam Park's Neighborhood Housing Services program from Tom LaFond.
3. Voted to send letter to Mayor Latimer regarding library hours at St. Anthony Park branch.
4. Supported initiating a Neighborhood-to-Neighborhood meeting January 11 at 7:30 p.m.
5. Approved Development Controls for Ellis Avenue housing site.

Como Park Planning committee

Bernice Flowers Strane, 1529 Grantham, volunteered to represent District 12 on the Como Park Planning Committee. The District 12 Community Council voted to designate Ms. Strane as District 12's representative at the November 9 meeting.

Ms. Strane will bring information and proposed plans for modification of Como Park and its facilities to the Council's Physical Committee on a regular basis to obtain comments on plans and proposals for Como Park. Comments from citizens will aid her in representing District 12 on the planning committee.

The Physical Committee meets on the first Thursday of every month. These meetings are open to the public.

Ms. Strane has worked with Girl Scout troops in the planting of wild flowers in Como Park over a ten-year period. She cares about Como Park as a whole and views it as a valuable community resource. She pointed out to the Community Council that Como Park has been designated as a regional park which makes it eligible for regional development funds.

Library Hours Recommendations

As part of developing the 1978 budget, the Division of Libraries has recommended reductions in the hours of operation for the downtown and branch libraries. This reduction is necessitated by the need to cut back on city services in order to reduce the city share of property taxes. In response to this need, the Libraries recommended that their hours of operation be from 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays and from 9:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

District 12 Community Council only considered the operation of St. Anthony Park branch library and recommended that scheduling maximize evening and Saturday hours. In addition, the Council requested an after-hours book drop.

The Division of Libraries will conduct a Users' Survey in the libraries asking patrons for recommendations on hours for the downtown and branch libraries.

Trash Hauling and Recycling Discussion Scheduled

All residents of St. Anthony Park are invited to attend an informational meeting at 2380 Hampden on December 1, at 7:30 p.m. to learn more about how a community can set up an organized refuse management plan in which the household separates trash into recyclable, non-recyclable and recoverable categories. The hauler maintains the separation in his collection.

Carol Trusz-Masuda, staff member of Public Service Options, 754 Midland Bank Building, Minneapolis, described a pilot project in Brooklyn Park to the Physical Committee on November 3 and again to a group of St. Anthony Park residents at the home of State Representative Ann Wynia on November 7.

The solid waste recovery program in Brooklyn Park was operated for six months with a grant from the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency. Three thousand private households participated. The average income from the recycled products per month was $950 and the reduced landfill cost was $158.58.

According to Masuda, "An organized refuse management plan benefits a community in two ways: it holds down cost to consumers and addresses environmental concerns."

Operational cost for refuse collection are rising. There is a potential for maintaining or reducing the cost of hauling and disposal by: income derived from the sale of recyclable materials, energy savings in truck operation cost by instituting efficient collection routes, and fewer landfill costs (gas and dumping fees) because of decreased compacted trash.

Organized collection and recycling programs will: reduce fuel consumption, recover useful materials, reduce neighborhood noise and reduce volume in landfills.

Vacancy Announced

Warren Schaber, Chairman of the Ramsey County Board of Commissioners, today announced a vacancy on the Social Services Citizens Advisory Committee.

"As part of our continuing effort to obtain qualified citizen participation in the government process, I am asking that any citizens interested in serving as a member of the Social Services Citizens Advisory Committee take this opportunity to do so."

The Social Services Citizens Advisory Committee assists in the development and review of policy pertaining to the delivery of social services in Ramsey County. The committee also assists in determining funding levels for the various services.

Citizens of Ramsey County who are interested in serving are asked to submit their names, address, and a resume of qualifications to the Executive Secretary of the Board of Ramsey County Commissioners, Suite 316, Courthouse, St. Paul, Minnesota 55102, no later than November 25, 1977.

The Brooklyn Park experience encouraged some St. Anthony Park residents to explore the possibilities for setting up a system in North and South St. Anthony Park. Recycling instituted along with normal residential refuse collection and the possibility of reducing the number of trips refuse haulers make up and down the alleys and streets of the neighborhood were the chief appeals of such a system.

A sub-committee toured the Brooklyn Park operation on November 23. Their on-site impressions will add to the presentation and discussion at the December 1 meeting.

The Community Council meeting on December 14, 7 p.m. with representatives of Public Works will also include a discussion of this concept of refuse collection.

Merriam Park Neighborhood Housing Services Explained

District 12 Community Council invited neighboring Merriam Park resident, Tom LaFond, to tell about Merriam Park's Housing Services experience cited by Mayor Latimer as a model for mixing private and public efforts to improve housing.

LaFond, President of the Merriam Park Neighborhood Housing Services, Inc., (NHS) described the partnership of residents, financial institutions and government to rehabilitate houses in Merriam Park. Such a partnership retains resident control over neighborhood developments, according to LaFond.

NHS arranges for home safety, evaluations on a voluntary basis, sets up staged improvements with owners and aids in obtaining financing for major repairs. These efforts help prevent neighborhood decline and to sell the neighborhood as a desirable place to live.

More detailed information about Merriam Park's incorporation and the services they offer in their neighborhood can be obtained by calling 645-9164.

Upcoming Meetings

December 1 Physical Committee—7:30 p.m. (Special meeting to discuss coordinated trash hauling system and source separation for recycling).

December 6 Economic Committee—5 p.m. (Meeting with Midwest Planning and Research, Inc. on the University Avenue Economic Study).

December 12-23 Thermograph display at St. Anthony Park Library—1 p.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday.

December 14 Community Council—7 p.m. (Discussion of Public Works plans for District 12).

All meetings are open to the public and are held at 2380 Hampden unless otherwise indicated.

Christmas: Give a Dog PARK PEOPLE

By Sandra Ireland, with Dr. George Mather

By Gerald McKay

The holidays are a natural time to give the family a pet. But when you bring a pet into your household, there are some things to consider.

What are the considerations in having a dog for a pet? First, your living facilities will dictate the size of the dog. Large breed dogs would be uncomfortable in an average size apartment. But a toy breed would do well. It is well to consider the location of your home. Are there open spaces for your dog to run and play or is there dense population?

The type of dog you choose is primarily a matter of personal choice, but some breeds of dogs are more aggressive, and require more discipline than others. Management of your dog is important, and when the dog is 6 months old, obedience training should be considered. This will help develop a good relationship between you and your pet. When you and your pet have this mutual experience, you will find more enjoyment in working and playing with your dog.

The proper age for buying a dog is 6-8 weeks old. If the dog is much older than 4 months, the change from kennel to a home can be very difficult for the dog.

Basic veterinary care includes: vaccinations at 7-8 weeks and a second vaccination against distemper and hepatitis should be given at 13 weeks or after, and then rabies vaccine at 16 weeks or later. All three of these vaccinations should be repeated in a year's time following the second set of vaccinations. Rabies can be repeated every three years, but distemper and hepatitis vaccine should be repeated annually. At this time, your veterinarian will examine your dog, and make any recommendations maintaining your dog's health.

Editor's Note: Dr. Mather is a professor of Veterinary Clinical Sciences at the University of Minnesota with a specialty in Preventive Medicine. Sandra Ireland is a registered radiologic technologist, and she works with Dr. Mather at the Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospitals, at the University of Minnesota.

Anyone who has ever driven will tell you that a spark plug is a pretty important part of the car. That's just what the folks in Owatonna's Future Farmers of America chapter said to Waino J. Kortesmaki when they presented him a large model of a spark plug mounted on a polished oak base and inscribed with a note of thanks for his 31 years as executive secretary of the state FFA organization. The occasion was "Kort's" retirement after nearly 50 years affiliation with this youth organization involving about 90,000 Minnesota boys and girls during his tenure.

Waino Kortesmaki, his wife, Martha, and their two children, Karen and Kathy, have lived at 2383 Doswell Ave. in St. Anthony Park in a home they built in 1951. They are truly a St. Anthony Park family. Karen and Kathy attended the local schools and the family has been associated with PTA's and other school activities, the St. Anthony Park Lutheran Church and the St. Anthony Park Association among others. Kathy and Karen (Mrs. Al Madison) are at Bethany Missionary in Minneapolis.

Kort was the spark plug of FFA in Minnesota, and Martha has designed many beautiful straw ornaments. Photos by Gerald McKay.

Both Waino and Martha are native Minnesotans. Waino was born in Winton and Martha in Esko. All four parents immigrated here from Finland.

In visiting with Kort, it is apparent that he feels his achievements have been very modest. The honors and recognitions he received at the time of his retirement last August 31, however, would fill several pages of "Who's Who in America"—more than we have room for here. The list of individuals and organizations paying tribute to him include Senator Hubert Humphrey, Congressman Albert Quie, Governors Rolvaag, Andersen and Perpich, and the American Cancer Society, State Department of Conservation, WCCO Radio, American Farm Bureau, National Safety Council, University of Helsinki, National Wildlife Federation, Minnesota Zoological Board, Sears Roebuck Foundation, Minnesota Vocational Agriculture Association, Minnesota Society for Crippled Children and Adults, Christian Rural Overseas Program, Keep Minnesota Clean and Scenic, and many others.

Kort says that actually, his greatest achievement is his help in developing leadership and citizenship of the members of Minnesota's 280 FFA chapters. Kort was a member of the state's first chapter in Esko in 1929 and was the first student secretary of the state FFA in 1930. Until about 1935, state FFA enrollment was around 200. In 1946, when Kort became state executive FFA secretary, membership was about 3900. In 1977, it was more than 17,000.

Through Kort's leadership, the state FFA members have conducted an anti-smoking campaign in which 16,000 posters and pledge cards were handed out at the 1977 state fair. Kort, himself, quit smoking in 1953 and by 1970, had saved enough money by not smoking to take his family to Finland.

In answer to the usual question, "What do you plan to do now?" Kort said he is already busy writing a chronological review of FFA in Minnesota. And he hopes to take his family back to Finland in 1978. After that, he will have time to do more things with the family, particularly with their new grandson, Joshua.

Happiness is a ☺ Donatelle's Pizza

By Dianne Wright

Walk through the doors of the Bibelot and up the stairs and you will find St. Anthony Park's newest and very welcome addition, La Tartelette Bakery. The bakery, opened November 1, is the culmination of a life long dream and much hard work and planning by owner Susan Miller. To Miller, a former French teacher and French pastry enthusiast, the bakery is more than a business venture; it is an outlet for her interest in French culture as well as her interest in people. Miller views the bakery as a place to greet friends who will enjoy the friendly atmosphere as much as her bakery.

Due to a lack of kitchen facilities at the bakery itself, baked goods have been supplied by the Danish Pastry Shop and Woody's Old Fashioned Bakery since the initial opening. However, health approved kitchen facilities have now been obtained at Commonwealth Terrace and shortly after Thanksgiving, La Tartelette will be adding French and Greek pastries to its already fine selection of the more typical bakery fare.

After one visit to La Tartelette, it is obvious that a friendly spirit is already developing owing as much to Miller herself as to the bakery goods and hot coffee.

Once you have found the bakery, it will be obvious that the Bibelot has expanded its store to the second floor. The second floor, with its wood beams and ample windows, covers approximately 1,000 square feet, including the bakery, and is the new home for the Bibelot's silk screen decorator fabrics, batiks and baskets. According to proprietor Roxana Freese, this is the store's second expansion within the last year.

Lil Kids, a shop specializing in "clothing, toys and gifts for the young child," which opened last March, is a family run operation and the first business venture for owners Jerry and Nancy Moulton. The talents of relatives and other artisans can be seen in the variety of handcrafted clothes and toys along with an interesting selection of imported toys. Moulton's sister, Joyce O'Brien, who helps run the shop, said she is impressed by the friendliness of her customers.

The Tobak shop opened last April. The shop is located between the Bibelot and the offices of Doctors Hartwick and Pierce and carries pipes, cigars, tobacco and gifts for the non-smoking man as well. An added service is pipe repairs. Slind, who has been an area resident all his life, feels that shopping for pipes and tobacco is enjoyable and that the old English flavor of the shopping district called for such a shop.

***

Hardware Hank acquired a new owner as of August 15, former manager and area resident, Stewart McIntosh. According to McIntosh, there are over 700 Hardware Hanks in a ten state area, all independently owned and operated, with a franchise for the name of Hardware Hank. Of particular interest is the fact that the store is a clearing-house for odd jobs and that McIntosh keeps a file of handimen who have expertise in certain areas.

Anyone who has shopped in the area is probably aware of the fact that Speedy Market has replaced Blomberg's grocery on the corner of Como and Doswell. According to manager Dick Dimond, Speedy Market is a metropolitan chain and a subsidiary of Schroeder Milk Co., a local corporation. Mr. Dimond, a local resident, reports that he is making some changes. There is fresh produce available and increased emphasis on services—adding additional products to the inventory, beginning a carry-out service and cleaning up. After the first of the year, the store will be redecorated and new cases and freezers added to accommodate more frozen food. Although most of the employees are new, one person who will be staying is butcher Amos Fink.

"A Great Miracle Happened"

By Lucy Cutler

The warm glow of candles will begin to light up many of the homes of the Jewish Community starting the evening of December 4 as the celebration of Chanukah begins. Every night, for eight nights, one more candle will be added to the Menorah until, on the last evening, the Menorah will be brightly lit and the holiday will come to a festive end.

one day, was lit. Miraculously the oil burned for eight days, and lasted until new oil arrived. Judah Maccabeus declared a festival of eight days to celebrate this miracle, and he called it Chanukah, which means dedication.

Modern Jews use the holiday to commemorate both the miracle of the lights, and the courage of the people as well. The celebration includes many traditions, such as the serving Riddles and other games also characterize the Chanukah celebration, and an old favorite simply asks: How many candles will you need if you light one additional candle every night for eight nights. It is important to remember the shamash, the extra candle used to light all the others. So there will be one extra candle every night, also. (Answer: 44 candles).

Traditional Potato Latkes: Peel and grate about 4 medium sized potatoes, and one medium onion. Allow to drain. Beat one egg and add it to the potato onion mixture along with some salt. Add enough matzo meal (available at SAP Coop) to thicken mixture to plop consistency. It should not be too loose.

Drop by spoonfuls into hot fat that is almost deep enough to cover the cakes. Brown on both sides, drain on paper towels. Serve hot or cold, delicious with applesauce.

The Chanukah celebration commemorates a particularly tumultuous time in Jewish history, about 2000 years ago. The Kingdom of Judah, at that time was ruled by Antiochus Epiphanes, the King of Syria. The Syrians tried to impose a Greek religion upon the Jews, and tried to forbid them to practice their own religion. Fighting courageously for several years, the heroic Judah Maccabeus and his brothers led the Jews to a significant victory for religious freedom, perhaps the first in the world! Upon victory, the people's first concern was to reclaim their beloved temple which had been ransacked by the Syrians, and used for worship of the Greek religion. Only one vial of holy oil was left which could be used for the Golden Menorah. New oil was sent for, but in the meantime the oil, which was only enough for of Latkes, delicious potato pancakes and playing with the dreidle.

Dreidles, the four sided tops are played with by young and old together. Each side of the dreidle has a symbol, nun, gimmel, hay, and shin. The four Hebrew letters represent the words which translate "A great miracle happened here." The game is one of put and take played with nuts, raisins or pennies.

Como Park/Falcon Heights: A Neighborhood

By Catherine Madison

What happens when 400 "impoverished and unemployed" young people reside and attend classes together in the middle of a quiet residential neighborhood?

Who knows?

In the case of the Job Corps vs. the Como Park-Falcon Heights Citizens Coalition, a lot of concerned citizens are spending a lot of time and money trying to find out. And in the process, both the worst and the best features of community organization have emerged.

The issue is one which has at times produced reactions "so vehement that people who are neutral or in favor of the Job Corps locating at Bethel have been afraid to surface because of repercussions in the community," according to Karen Christofferson, citizen participation coordinator for the city of St. Paul. Although she is not actively involved in the affairs of the District 10 Community Council, she provided the technical assistance necessary to establish that organization as one of 17 such planning groups in St. Paul.

"The role of the chairperson should be a neutral position. It was my job to listen to the community and provide support to the committees," Martin said. She knew of people who were afraid to speak out, she said, and felt they should be allowed a forum. "I really thought I could have a positive impact on bringing the neighborhood together to talk about these things." She found, however, "no room for dissent and no opportunity for rational discussion of the facts."

Betty Woodhouse, a council member who favors the Job Corps center, is Martin's neighbor, friend, and boss at the state's public services department. This fact suggested the possibility of political pressure to approve the Job Corps emanating from outside the council, some committee members said. Both Woodhouse and Martin denied this. "They assumed that because I work for her, I obviously share the same opinion," Martin said. "I resented that."

"No volunteer job is worth my health and my peace of mind," she said. Although a certain amount of conflict is healthy, it is unhealthy when "adult people don't feel comfortable saying what they believe in."

Most of those involved agree that the timing was unfortunate. The Job Corps began investigating the site last spring, when the council was just being organized. Activity and emotional levels reached a peak in November, when newly elected officers were still trying to define their own roles and the purpose of the council itself. Angry words, accusations, and in the words of one observer, "a lot of screaming and hollering" resulted.

"You can't put a French poodle in to lead a bunch of wolves."

—Sam Lindberg, resident who does not oppose Job Corps

Karen Martin, chairperson of the District 10 council, was elected September 28, took office October 28, and resigned November 14. Although several participants said they felt she had done a good job, some members of the council's Bethel site committee claimed she and others were "dragging their feet" or were even "actively antagonistic" toward the committee's goals.

"We had a job to do and we started rolling. Those who didn't want to roll with us stayed where they were."

—Bob Moder, chairperson, Bethel site committee

Because things were happening so quickly, the site committee found council bylaws and regulations (such as one requiring seven-day written notice of meetings) restrictive. In order to bypass such time-consuming official sanctions and to include the part of the community that is officially Falcon Heights, they decided to call themselves the Como Park-Falcon Heights Citizens Coalition.

It is this group which has been effective in organizing the 300 or more citizens who oppose the Job Corps. They have distributed flyers in the area around Bethel, met with public officials, marched on the Capitol, displayed yard signs, and used their own funds to send representatives to Job Corps centers in Cincinnati, Detroit, and Clinton, Iowa. Moder, a realtor, contacted appraisers near three other centers to inquire about declining property values.

n Trouble

In a recent meeting with Gov. Perpich, the group offered to fly him or a member of his staff to any Job Corps center in the country. They contend that no other centers are located in residential neighborhoods, similar to the Bethel area.

"They're planning to experiment at our cost," said Bob Moder. "The experiment is one in which we feel the stakes are too high and not in our favor." The coalition members intend to function until final decisions are made concerning the Bethel site. There is some question as to whether the existence of the group constitutes a split from the District 10 council.

Tom Nord, treasurer of the council and member of the coalition, thinks not. "This practice isn't unique to our district," he said. Since many issues do not affect people living in other parts of a district, they are often best handled by individual committees who report to the council.

"The work that needs to be done is not dramatic work...we need really dedicated people who can get the community to take positive action instead of reacting all the time."

—Karen Martin, former chairperson, District 10

"This issue has impeded any planning or progress we might accomplish," said Betty Woodhouse. Others agree that the Bethel issue has exacerbated the growing pains of the new council, causing it to be way behind on other concerns. Como Park, the lake, the zoo, safety factors, school issues, and other planning projects also demand the attention of council members.

Dave Schiminsky, acting chairperson, plans to get busy. "The Bethel committee has been rushing into things, and rightly so," he said, "but I am hopeful we will be able to continue to function as a group. This council represents a lot of folks, and we have many things to do."

If the coalition is successful in keeping Job Corps out of the area, the campus will again be on the market. Committee members say they are open to other possibilities for its use. The St. Paul school district recently mentioned using the buildings for Central High School students while their school is being remodeled. According to one source, that, too, prompted calls to the governor's office.

The committee itself has proposed that the buildings, except for the gymnasium, be torn down and the land divided into lots for 47 new homes. St. Paul could buy the gymnasium for the Parks and Recreation Department and issue general obligation bonds worth $2.8 million to pay for the development. Lots would then be sold for a minimum bid of $13,500 each.

"Based on the two-child per family national average, this would put $2.9 million into the public school system," said Mike Fritz, an auditor who has investigated the proposal. "Nontaxable property would be turned into taxable property, ultimately helping the city of St. Paul," he said.

The Issue:

In October, the U.S. Department of Labor signed an option agreement to purchase the Bethel College site for use as a Job Corps Center. Four hundred Minnesota students, ages 16–21, would voluntarily reside and attend vocational classes there. The staff would number about 125; one security officer would be provided for every 50 students. Students would be screened before being admitted, would be required to obtain passes to leave the campus, and would not be allowed to have cars.

Citizens who oppose the Job Corps Center have formed the Como Park-Falcon Heights Citizens Coalition. On a fact-finding mission to the former site of a center in Clinton, Iowa, they were told by the police captain that while the Job Corps was there the crime rate had risen 25 percent, the number of students had increased from the promised 300 to 900 (including some from outside the state) in order to keep the program economically feasible, and the police had to be equipped for riot control. After the Job Corps left, the crime rate decreased 25 percent, they were told.

Members of the coalition fear higher crime rates, decreasing property values, and a detrimental effect on the family environment in this area. They have raised at least $500 so far, hired a lawyer, and expect to pay $5,000 to $10,000 in legal fees if the Job Corps is allowed to come in. According to Mike Fritz, the coalition, claiming everyone has a right to peace and tranquility, would then seek a restraining order while attempting to determine whether the benefits of the program outweigh risk to the community.

Those who do not oppose the Job Corps cite potential employment for St. Paul teachers as well as a willingness to help disadvantaged youth. They are not officially organized. One of them, Betty Woodhouse, visited Rhinelander, Wisconsin, a resort area where a Job Corps is located in an older residential neighborhood. She said citizens there had described Job Corps youth as a "boon to the town" and a source of help in emergencies and town activities.

In a letter to District 10 citizens, Bethel College president Carl Lundquist expressed support for the site, claiming the Job Corps to be "the most perfect fit for the campus that we have discovered in five years of searching." He invited citizens to form an advisory council to guide the Job Corps in establishing community relationships and said the campus resources, such as the gymnasium and tennis courts, would be available for community use.

"We looked just for the fun of it, but ended up buying."

That's how John and Kathy Magnuson came to be owners of their big Victorian house at 2219 Knapp.

They were walking one evening about 3½ years ago and saw the "For Sale" sign in the yard. John was at that time employed as a recreation leader at Langford Park.

They were immediately attracted by the domed cupola jutting out from the bedroom window on the second floor. They were also captivated by the beautiful "carpenter's lace" archway, visible through the window of the living room.

"We've always loved old houses," the Magnusons agree. They prefer an older home which is likely to have quality woodwork, lots of space, solid construction, and real plaster on the walls. When the Magnusons bought their house, it had been cut up into four apartments. For years it was a multiple-family dwelling, and Kathy and John are constantly running into people who had lived there as students. But the Magnusons now occupy all of the house except for one first-floor apartment. And they can hardly wait to take over all of it.

The house was one of the first to be constructed in St. Anthony Park. It was built in 1891 by a St. Paul contractor named Buell. Mrs. Annie Whitney Buell had been educated at Cortland Normal School in New York where she was the first female student.

Buell bought four adjacent lots and first built the house next-door to the Magnusons, 2223, where he intended for his family to live. But Annie Buell said that was too small. She then designed the Magnuson house to meet her own specifications, and the family lived there for many years.

Buell and his wife wanted to move to St. Anthony Park to "get their daughters away from the evils of the city." But the Magnusons have been told that "Ma" Barker, a notorious St. Paul gangster, hid out with her sons just two houses up the street during this period. Perhaps the Buells weren't entirely successful in escaping the "evils" of the city!

Buell spared no expense in constructing the house. There is a tiled fireplace with bevelled mirror and carved oak woodwork in the parlor. The dining room boasts an elaborate built-in buffet with hand-carved decorations and brass drawer pulls. Oak sliding doors and other woodwork, removed to convert the single-family dwelling into a duplex or triplex, have been carefully preserved in the basement.

The house originally had a parlor, sitting room, dining room, kitchen, and pantry on the first floor. A back porch was added later. Four bedrooms, an enclosed side porch, and a bathroom with a clawfooted tub are on the second floor. Two partially finished rooms, plus additional storage space, comprise the attic, once the maid's quarters. John and Kathy are presently insulating this area.

The master bedroom opens onto the cupola which provides a stunning view of Langford Park in all seasons. An enclosed side porch offers relief from the heat on a warm summer day or night.

Kathy and John do most of the renovation together. They have, on occasion, recruited extra help—like the time the bathroom ceiling fell down. John was trying to take off wallpaper and the whole ceiling collapsed.

That's about the worst experience they've had so far. Mostly it has been cosmetic work of papering and painting. Eventually they plan to knock out walls, rebuild a staircase, and restore the house as close to its original floor plan as is possible.

What advice would the Magnusons have for others interested in restoring old houses? "Don't hesitate if you have had no experience. You'll learn in a hurry."

Shave & a Haircut...44 Bits

By Bob Rucker/COMPAS

Supposing historians marked a vanishing species with a monument: Would they have the contacts that would lead them to the last of The Old Time Barbers in Saint Paul? Most of the city's barbers would reluctantly admit that they know where a man can still get a four dollar haircut and a shave for $1.50. In his single chair shop at 922 Raymond, Nick Delmont has barbered for 7 years, and for sixty-five years before that, he has worked in one location or another, always giving his customer the even break.

"You know," smiled 88 year old Nick, "there's two reasons why a man comes to a barber." He makes the point with the back of his hand tapping my chest. "To improve his appearance. That's the first reason. Now, I can do that for him. It doesn't matter if he's tall or short or got pig hair to begin with. Anything I do is going to make him look better. A good man knows that." The voice moves behind me from ear to ear as he inspects the back of my head, scissoring the hair between his fingers. A touch of Italian inflection shows through his speech. (His grandparents immigrated to the States from Italy via Africa, via Canada. Nick still speaks Italian fluently.) His voice is raspy, like a talking paper wad.

"The other reason," he says suddenly, "that a man comes to a barber is to relax. You know, the old timers say: 'Fifteen minutes in a barber chair is worth three hours in bed.' Take a businessman. Fella works hard all day, lots of stress, comes in to get a haircut and a shave. So I lay the chair back and put the hot towels on him. If he wants to lie there on his back and sleep and I've got nobody waiting for the chair, sure I let him sleep. Then, when I get finished with him and he gets up to go, he feels great. Like a new man. That's what he came in for."

He has looked straight in my eye, tapping my chest with a comb for three minutes. He has almost finished scissoring, and turns to face the clippers. There are several hanging from the shelf, clustered around a plug. As if he was weighing fruit, he selects one for the heavy, solid feel in his hand. The clippers start to buzz, but he keeps talking. Half of what he says I can't hear. He seems to be telling the procedures and explaining why he cuts what he is cutting. The clipping takes only a moment compared to the scissor work, the mark of an old-timer. The clipper is off, it is hanging back on the hook.

At 88 Nick is certainly the oldest working barber in town. At 87 he had to fight the licensing bureau for continuation of his permit. They charged him for 5 years, but it is only valid until he is ninety. At that time they want to check him again.

There are other problems, more severe. His little shop is scheduled to be torn down by the Housing and Redevelopment Authority to make room for a very small park. He would have been out by the time this article was written were it not for a two week extension. By the time this appears in the Bugle, he will have packed up the barber chair, a hatrack, a radio that looks like a wooden toaster, his dusty (not dirty) magazines (including a tourbook of the Capitol Building in Washington that shows Richard Nixon as president). All the tonic bottles with their oily labels will have been marshalled into freight boxes and taken away. Nick will be off looking for another shop.

"If I wasn't barbering" he says "I'd just sit at home and stare."

But, as it is, he can scarcely find a place as small as he needs, or within the upper limit of his budget. He has a battery of customers, some of whom have been with him as long as 30 years, none of them want him to stop. Every time the door opens upon an old patron of Nick, he has to disappoint them with the bad news: there is no place he can use that costs less than four times what he presently pays.

Nevertheless, one gets the sense he won't stop looking. He can make a living teaching shaves at the barber schools (they call him in special for those days), and he is willing to wait for a place to appear, keeping his professional possessions in a garage. Of his last few days on Raymond, he plans to spend them as routinely as the hundreds before.

"Well, now it's three-fifteen" he says, "In about an hour, I'll count my money, then I'll call the wife, she'll come pick me up. I'll get home, take off the shoes, eat too much, sleep for half an hour, then watch a little TEE-vee." He jumps off his chair and heads for the radio to turn up a marching band song with a chorus of men whistling the melody. Then he marches, whistling, back to the chair.

Lauderdale

By Jane I. Lindberg

As a neighbor for 50 years, Helen Lindstrom submits the following loving tribute to Chester and Lydia Alfson who celebrated 60 years of active married life recently:

"He will be 86 in December and she will be 82 in the spring.

Nothing too remarkable about that, you say? Let me tell you a few things about my neighbors across the street.

He still walks or rides his bike at least a mile or two each day, weather permitting.

She bakes bread and has done so all her married life, long before it was fashionable to be conservative and creative in the culinary line.

He grows so many vegetables on a small plot in the back yard that his neighbors are supplied all winter long with fresh carrots. Yes, I said fresh carrots. He has made a root-cellar in the yard to keep vegetables at the right temperature all winter.

At the age of 80 he taught himself Spanish.

He has made spinning wheels that are perfection, plus making furniture and also refinishing old pieces.

When she was 75 she took her first airplane ride and has decided that this is the only way to travel.

He is his own mechanic and has kept his 1954 Studebaker going for all these years.

At the age of 83 he roofed his house, took down 3 huge diseased elms and installed his own furnace.

I want to wish Chester and Lydia Alfson in Lauderdale a happy 60th anniversary and hope that they will continue to be my neighbors for many more years.

I truly believe that the mold was broken and that there are not too many left like them."

The Health Screening for older and retired persons at City Hall November 17 was attended by 73, convincing proof for the desirability of neighborhood health care. Thanks to North Suburban Senior Council, Ramsey County Nursing Service, St. Paul Rehabilitation, UM student and community volunteers.

Halloween Party Howling Success

By Lucy Cutler

Lauderdale expanded its traditional Halloween Celebration this year by adding a costume parade. Following Committee Chairperson Colleen Rod, about two dozen children (plus a few adults) started out from the Lauderdale Park collecting people as they walked until they had about four times as many when they arrived at City Hall. They marched in the spotlight shone by Roseville squad car, driven by Sgt. Lenny Lee who delighted all the youngsters by sounding his siren occasionally. Don Person, village maintenance man, ended the parade.

The giant party including free refreshments was well under way as youngsters signed up for the costume judging contest. The rest of the evening was well taken up by watching scary movies in the council chambers, helping polish off the hot dogs, juice and donuts, and admiring the costumes of friends and neighbors.

Lauderdale youngsters had been encouraged to do their trick or treating early, starting about 4:30. Due to the com-

UNICEF Drive a Success

We wish to express our sincerest appreciation, and grateful thanks, to each and every one who helped, in any way, to make our 1977 UNICEF Drive such an outstanding success! The total amount collected amounted to $567.90. This compares to last year's total of $413.62. Thank you! Thank you! You are all most generous.

Our special thanks to Mary Mergenthal and Mary Ann Peterson for distributing and collecting the boxes and for taking care of the money. They did an excellent job in keeping track of the boxes and they played a big, important part in the success of the drive.

We are grateful, too, to ten of our sixth graders for assembling the boxes. Mark Granovsky, David Howe, Andrea Genia, Amy Pearson, Keri Stoppel, Ruth Lageson, Trudy Ophaug, Kasi Bergland, Kara Morris and Theresa Kusant worked very efficiently and made a big contribution through their efforts.

We thank our teachers who helped teach the students about what UNICEF is and what it does in the underprivileged parts of the world. This drive is a tangible way our students show their concern, and empathy, for their counterparts in the "Third World."

Berneice Herron, School Social Worker, and Charles Wel-din, Principal, St. Anthony Park School.

Pick a card Either card

Actually, there's no trick to applying for a Master Charge or VISA card. You can obtain either or both through St. Anthony Park Bank. Just pick up the application form from Customer Service or in the lobby of either building.

VISA and Master Charge work their magic by giving you instant credit at shops, restaurants, hotels, motels, car rental agencies, department stores and airlines in the United States and around the world. In addition, if you're away from home and short of cash, you can get a cash advance with either card at participating banks.

Master Charge and VISA... another service from your neighborhood bank.
