

Two Park men work with Will Steger

By Roald Sateren

A rare breed chooses a lifestyle of working ten-hour days and six-day weeks and living in a place with no running water or electricity. But for Paul Ormseth and John Pierce this is exactly what drew them to Will Steger's homestead in northern Minnesota.

Ormseth and Pierce were members of Steger's eight-person Trans-Antarctic Expedition Base Camp. Established over two years ago, the Base Camp is located on Steger's homestead just outside of Ely, Minn. The primary purpose of the Base Camp was to train the dogs and build the sleds used on the Expedition. It also served as the central gathering point for Expedition planning.

Pierce, 26, was born in St. Anthony Park but now calls Ely his home. His father had a dental practice in the Park for 25 years. Ormseth, 24, was born in Minnesota but spent most of his early youth growing up in Worcester, Mass. In 1980 he moved to St. Anthony Park with his parents, where they still reside.

Hired as a carpenter in Sept., 1988, Ormseth was one of two carpenters in charge of construction and upkeep at Steger's Base Camp.

"Carpenter was my title," said Ormseth, but he was quick to point out that Base Camp members did "all kinds of different things." In addition to his work on buildings, Ormseth helped out where needed, whether building dog sleds or taking the dogs out on training runs, otherwise known as "running the dogs."

A recent graduate of Yale, with a major in English and minor in architecture, Ormseth helped Steger design and begin construction on a 4,000-square-foot conference center at the homestead. Utilizing passive solar heating and radiant floor heating—tubes of warm water circulating throughout the floors—the conference center is designed to be energy efficient. An 800-square-foot conservatory attached to the main building will fit into the "solar scheme" and will allow food and plants to grow throughout the year. Extending out into the trees, a huge third-floor deck overlooks the lake on the homestead. Steger plans to hold conferences on environmental issues at the center upon its completion.

Pierce is an experienced voyageur of the Boundary Waters Canoe Area (BWCA) and the Northwest Territories. He was hired in the fall of 1987 as one of Steger's dog handlers.

In addition to running the dogs, Pierce helped design and build several of the Camatek sleds currently being used by the Antarctic Expedition. The sleds are built to withstand the tremendous abuse of the 4,000 mile journey.

"The sleds are made out of Sitka spruce," explained Pierce. "It's a soft wood and real straight-grained. We laminated ten pieces together with epoxy and layered graphite fibers between each lamination. Then we put birch plywood on the sides to give it strength." Numerous wooden slats run between the two big sled runners and everything is lashed together to provide flexibility.

At the time Pierce was hired, there were no roads going into the Base Camp. Everything was hauled in, a job ideally suited for the dogs. "There was a lot of building going on," said Pierce. "We brought in lumber, rock, sand, cement, gasoline and firewood. With our dog teams, we would haul loads in weighing nearly 2,000 pounds. And we would do this all day long, all winter long."

To prepare the dogs for the grueling, seven-month-long Antarctic Expedition, they were worked continuously. "If I'd come in for a lunch break, I'd hitch my dogs outside and somebody else would come out and jump on my team and keep them running," said Pierce.

In order to keep the dogs working last winter, the Base

Changes in store for Bandana Square

By Mary Mergenthal

Don't put off doing your Christmas shopping, or your post-Christmas shopping, at Bandana Square. In fact, shopping there will help keep the Energy Park retail complex viable.

Current tenants are meeting now with representatives of the Port Authority and representatives of Jackson-Scott & Associates, a Minneapolis retail management firm hired by the authority in April to run the mall. In those meetings, the authority and Jackson-Scott are trying to determine which tenants want to stay, which can make it economically, and which fit into the plan for balance of commercial offerings. The Port Authority took over the project when Wilder Foundation pulled out last spring after taking a $9 million loss on the property.

"We announced early on that there would be changes," said Mike Strand, director of communication for the Port Authority. "We didn't want to look like the wolf at the door."

Strand indicated that the authority had asked two independent consulting firms to study the facility. "Two options came back," he said, "bad and worse. We chose bad." Strand elaborated that the authority decided to give retail another shot even though some recommendations suggested going entirely to office space and some suggested shutting down the whole facility and selling it.

The Port Authority has decided to choose a "middle ground," consolidating retail spaces on the first floor and converting the second floor for office use. The authority hopes to have all continuing or future tenants under lease obligations by the end of January.

"We're going to have to make some hard calls," Strand admits but insists it has to be done. The lease agreements will probably be for 3-5 years' duration and the authority will be assisting those businesses that need to relocate.

The conversion of the second floor will cost up to $1.25 million. "We hope for good interest in the office space," Strand said. "It's a warm, distinctive environment with mass transit to the door and other amenities close by. We'd like to see one or two major tenants."

Originally the authority had hoped to acquire the state lottery as a tenant but that has not been possible, so far. Regardless who stays in the building, or moves to it, the Port Authority has committed up to $125,000 for marketing in 1990.

Gateway to open with Park Crossing

By Kathy Malchow

By this time next year, the intersection of Energy Park Drive/Raymond Avenue should look different. If all goes well, we'll see a spruced up gateway to St. Anthony Park, starting with a retail center called Park Crossing on the northwest corner. Long-range plans are in the works for an apartment building with approximately 16 units on the southeast corner, rehabilitation to the homes on Everett Court, some passive green space on the southwest corner—with all of this tied together by landscaping and the old-fashioned green lantern street lamps throughout.

Only Park Crossing is a sure thing at this point. The other possibilities depend on a number of intertwined factors concerned mostly with their financing.

Park Crossing will be a 10,000 sq. ft. retail center with Food-N-Fuel, a convenience/gas facility, as its anchor tenant. Judy Schumacher, marketing director for Wellington Management, the center's developer, said they also have a signed letter of intent from Subway for a sandwich shop. "We are currently under discussion with a florist, an eye care facility, an oriental restaurant and several other retail facilities. And ParkBank is considering installing an ATM on the premises," she continued.

Schumacher says traffic has increased greatly since the straightening of the intersection last year, so that a minimum of 25,000 cars now travel through each day.

Groundbreaking for Park Crossing is tentatively scheduled for March, 1990, with plans to open early next summer.

Wellington Management has also been negotiating for several months on the southeast corner with the owners of Terado Corporation and the house adjacent. It has recently reached agreement with both parties and purchase agreements have been submitted. Plans are to remove both existing structures and combine the properties in order to create a large enough site for housing. Wellington

Please consider making a financial gift in 1989 to the St. Anthony Park Community Council to help with the programs and activities that serve the neighborhood. The annual letter was mailed early in November. Our goal for the year is $5000, which would be used to augment the citizen participation budget provided by the City of St. Paul. A tax deductible gift of any amount will assist in supporting our programs and allow the Council to continue to be an effective advocate for the neighborhood.

Council actions at a glance

- Voted to submit a proposal to the St. Paul Foundation to undertake a feasibility study to establish an Arts District in West Midway/St. Anthony Park.
- Allocated up to $400 to hire a consultant to redesign the council's page in the Bugle.
- Acted to recommend to the Board of Zoning Appeals the denial of a major variance to allow the property at 2295 Long to be used as a four-plex rather than a duplex.
- Discussed a proposed rezoning of property at 2186 Como Ave. to OS-1 to allow the establishment of a veterinary clinic for cats only. Item will be discussed Nov. 29 at the Housing Committee.
- Recommended denial of a Class B Gambling Location License at 2554 Como Ave. requested for Gatsby's.
- Approved policies & procedures to be followed in future considerations of variance and special condition use permits.
- Agreed with University UNITED that the proposed location of 3 fast food restaurants at Midway Shopping Center be reconsidered because of the abundance of these businesses on University Ave. & the increase in traffic and parking problems that accompany them.

The St. Anthony Park (District 12) Community Council is a group of 21 citizens elected to serve the District 12 area of St. Paul, including residents of St. Anthony Park, and representatives of commerce and industry. It is one of 17 citizen participation councils in the city.

The council meets the Wednesday after the first Thursday of every month. All meetings are open to the public. Check for location.

Community Council zoning request policy

The St. Anthony Park Community Council has adopted a policy to improve its approach to variances and special condition use permits—forms of relief from the city zoning code that property owners may request. For example, variances are frequently requested to permit garages that do not comply with the zoning code.

Before city action on a zoning request, the Community Council and its committees are usually asked for a recommendation. In most cases, the property owner making the request presents the case before the Council's Housing Committee or Physical Planning Committee. That committee makes a recommendation, which is adopted or rejected by the full Council.

Council members have recently expressed concern that the council and its committees have sometimes acted with little information, minimal neighborhood input, or both. The council hopes that its new policy will help its recommendations to be fair and consistent.

Specifically, the new policy requires the following procedures to be followed in ruling on variances and permits:

- Owners of property near an affected site must receive notice of proposed action by the council or its committees. The policy leaves the extent and nature of the notice (e.g., by telephone or mail) to the judgment of each committee.

- "Interested parties" (including nearby property owners) must have a chance to comment on the proposed action. Interested parties must also be given a chance to question the property owner seeking the variance or permit.

- The policy requires the committee to make specific findings with respect to each of the criteria enumerated in the city zoning code as conditions to a variance or permit.

The Physical Planning Committee, Housing Committee, and other standing committees of the Council include some council members, most of whom are elected, and some ad hoc members, who are appointed; the committees' recommendations are not binding on the full council. The policy sets forth procedures to discourage city planning authorities from making decisions based on committee action prior to a vote of the full Council.

Copies of the full policy are available at the St. Anthony Park Community Council office.

Recycling scavengers linked to other crimes

Thieves who take recycling from curbsides in St. Paul are very daring individuals. After a recent report to the police of a scavenging incident, it was learned that many of these people are involved in other crimes in our neighborhoods. The responding officer said that some scavengers simply drive around neighborhoods and through alleys looking for things. They have been known to take recycling, aluminum siding, gutters and valuables from garages. Reporting scavengers is very important, because the record of a thief's total number of offenses will help in his or her conviction.

Recently, scavengers stole materials that had been placed in front of the office of the Energy Consortium, the organization that coordinates the recycling program in St. Paul. Mary T'Kach, the recycling director who saw the scavengers, said, "These people obviously didn't know we are the ones who fought for the anti-scavenging ordinance and that we have been recently working with the St. Paul Police to encourage better enforcement."

The St. Paul City Anti-Scavenging ordinance makes it illegal for anyone other than the designated curbside recycling service to take recycling that has been placed out for pickup. Residents who witness scavengers stealing their recycling should call the police immediately. Get a full description of the person and vehicle and a license plate number. Captain Mike Smith of the St. Paul Police Department said officers are being trained about the ordinance in an effort to provide better enforcement. The ordinance has been in effect for over a year and no one yet has been convicted or fined the $700 fee.

Looking at land use

After considering the rapid changes taking place in the West Midway, the St. Anthony Park Community Council has requested assistance to revise the land use section of our District Plan. The Department of Planning and Economic Development has assigned planner Roger Ryan to work with the council on the new Land Use Plan. The Council and other representatives of the community will help develop a list of land use issues and small areas with land use conflicts for consideration by the Planning Commission.

Individuals who may be interested in participating in this process to adopt a plan for use in the decade of the '90s are asked to call the Council office at 282-7884. The council expects to start work on this review and revision very soon so that the redevelopment taking place in the area can be guided more effectively.

Energy audits for renters

Energy Audits: they're not just for homeowners anymore. Tenants of one- to four-unit rental properties are also eligible for an energy audit in cooperation with NSP and the St. Anthony Park Community Council. Even though renters are not likely to implement major weatherization projects, there are several benefits to completing an energy audit:

- The tenant will be given a free weatherization kit, which includes a caulking gun and caulk, a roll of weather stripping and a set of window pulley seals. These easy-to-install devices will provide instant energy savings and increase comfort level by blocking cold air drafts.

- The renter will find out if the heating plant is operating at its rated efficiency, or if it is in need of a tune-up. Remember, even if you don't pay an NSP bill, you still pay for heat as part of the rent. An inefficient furnace can cost money in rent increases.

- The tenant will get a safety check of the heating plant. An improperly functioning furnace or chimney is a very serious health hazard. If you think it's been two or more years since your furnace was checked by an expert, it's due now. (Furnace and duct cleaning companies are not qualified to make this type of inspection).

- The renter will receive a copy of the Minnesota energy standards for rental property, and a list of any items in your house or apartment that do not comply with those standards. Current St. Paul housing code requires that all rental property be in compliance with these standards. The standards include attic, wall and basement insulation, caulking and weather stripping, storm windows and doors and furnace efficiency.

The $10 charge for the audit will be billed to the NSP account holder. The free weatherization kit valued at about $12 will belong to the tenant. Call 292-7884 today to request an energy audit!

Camp contacted the U.S. Forest Service in charge of the BWCA and offered to be their dog-powered delivery service, according to Pierce. "So we delivered 357 toilets each weighing 30 pounds," he said. These went into campsites throughout the BWCA.

Besides Ormseth and Pierce, the other members of the Base Camp team included two additional dog handlers, another carpenter, one cook, one seamstress and the Base Camp coordinator.

Last winter, as Steger and the rest of his Expedition team were busy traveling around the world promoting the Expedition, the Base Camp members were cast as members of the Expedition. They were brought to an abandoned iron ore pit in Babbitt, Minn., where a commercial was shot for Target, the Expedition's major retail sponsor. Ormseth was cast as Steger. Pierce played the Soviet Expedition member, Victor Boyarsky.

When asked about taking part in a major expedition himself, Ormseth downplayed the idea. He cited the wilderness lifestyle as the thing that attracted him to the Steger Expedition. "What I got out of it was that the lifestyle really appealed to me. Living out close to nature. It's not really a primitive lifestyle but more back to the basics."

Keep Pierce away from the wilderness very long and he gets a little stir-crazy. "I can't wait to get back up there," he said. Pierce would like to do some of his own polar dog sledging, but on a much smaller scale and without all the media attention.

Earlier this year, several members of the media came to Base Camp to cover the Expedition and were amazed by the rustic, back-to-basics lifestyle at the homestead. "We were sitting around the table one night and this one guy was looking at us kind of funny and finally he said, 'What do you do up here at night, sit here and stare at each other?'" Pierce recalled with a laugh.

"Wondering what to do was never a concern. Some nights we'd play cards or just sit around and talk," Pierce said. And with everybody's diverse backgrounds there was never a lack of things to talk about, according to Pierce.

What everyone at the homestead looked forward to most was the twice-a-week sauna. They would sit in the sauna all evening, chop a hole in the ice and jump in, according to Ormseth. "Boy, we looked forward to those saunas—they were the greatest," added Pierce.

So, what's Will Steger like?

There was noticeable silence from both Ormseth and Pierce when asked this question. "What can you say, he's incredible. I wouldn't know where to start," said Pierce. Ormseth nods, adding: "He's really easy-going, real down-to-earth. He brings in all these young people to work at his place. It is

"Beyond Antarctica, Will's own approach is just a holistic way of living, in harmony with nature and that's the idea behind using the dogs to travel," said Ormseth.

And Steger as a boss?

"The neat thing is he has his idea about what he wants for the house or the design for the sleds, and then he just turns you loose. He doesn't come in every day and check on you," said Pierce.

This winter Pierce will be busy running his company, Northern Lights Expeditions, which was specifically designed as an educational tool for the 1990 Trans-Antarctic Expedition. From their base in Ely, Pierce and his partner lead courses that model the clothing, diet and dog training of the Antarctic Expedition. Pierce also travels around the state and country showing slides and giving talks on Steger's Expedition as well as his own experiences.

During the first part of December, Ormseth will travel to the East coast with another Base Camp member to give presentations on the Antarctic Expedition. He is also busy applying to architecture programs at several grad schools on the West coast and hopes to start next fall.

Will anything keep the Expedition from reaching its goal?

Pierce and Ormseth are sure of the abilities of the dogs and Expedition members with whom they have become close friends. "I don't think anything could stop them—they're incredibly versatile and self-reliant," said Pierce. Ormseth agrees, "You look at the dogs trained up there, they could go through anything. They're so strong, so hearty and experienced."

This is one of the styles of sleds being used by the Steger expedition in Antarctica. It is styled after one used 90 years ago by Norwegian explorer Nansen. John Pierce helped build sleds like this.

Save fire station

Dear editor:

The St. Paul Fire Department administration is considering several changes within the Fire Department. One of the possible changes would include the removal of a fire company from Station 23 at 1926 Como Ave.

A review of the past will be helpful in understanding this situation.

In 1978, Station 13 at Raymond and Hampden Aves., and Station 23 at Snelling and Canfield Aves. were both closed and consolidated into one station 23 at 1926 Como Ave.

Currently, the station is staffed at all times by two fire companies, Engine 23 and Engine 13. Each company consists of three or four personnel.

Engine 23 personnel serve as both firefighters and paramedics. They staff either a fire engine or paramedic ambulance, depending on the situation which arises. Hence, when they are on call with one apparatus, the other apparatus is unstaffed and out-of-service. The other fire company is assigned to Fire Engine 13.

For approximately 5-7 hours each day, Engine 23 is out of the station with the ambulance. It might be out on a medical emergency, standing by at fires or events, inspecting buildings, at training, getting supplies, etc. During this time, Engine 13 is the only staffed fire apparatus at the station. Also, during this time Engine 13, in many instances, is sent in as first responder to medical emergencies before a paramedic ambulance arrives from a different station.

Conversely, there are instances when Engine 13 is at structure fires, rubbish fires, vehicle fires, grass or brush fires, or vehicle maintenance, leaving Engine 23 personnel available for either a fire or medical emergency.

Specifically, the change being considered involves moving Engine 13 to Station 18 located on University Ave., near Dale St. If the change is made, it would supposedly be temporary. However, in the past, temporary changes like this have become permanent.

Obviously, this change would result in longer response time for fire and medical emergencies.

The fire captains at Station 23 oppose this change. We prefer to continue to serve the St. Anthony Park area the best we can which, in our opinion, means leaving Engine 13 at Station 23.

If any individuals are in agreement with us, please contact your city council representative or the mayor to express your opinions. Citizen involvement in this matter is of the utmost importance.

Open government

Dear editor,

I read with interest the letter in the last issue of the Bugle calling for more openness in government as part of the ethics issue.

As one who has authored several bills promoting government ethics, I strongly believe that government functions best when it is under careful public scrutiny. During the past several months I have received numerous calls and letters from constituents in support of my proposals, indicating there is widespread public interest.

Regarding the openness in government issue, I authored S.F. 1609 during the 1989 session which would require the Legislature to comply with the provisions of the state open meeting law.

This legislation is necessary because the Legislature exempted itself from the requirements of the open meeting law when that legislation was passed in 1973. My bill would require all committees, including conference committees, to be open to the public, as well as task forces, commissions, and even the DFL and Republican party caucuses.

Representatives Alice Hausman and Mary Jo McGuire have also expressed their support for this legislation.

I will continue to fight for the passage of S. F. 1609 so that the public can participate in every part of the legislative process.

Remembering Miss Ohman

Dear editor,

I enjoyed the tribute to Marian Ohman, with the history of the elementary school that went with it. Miss Ohman taught both my husband and me for a year-and-a-half, then a generation later was the sixth grade teacher for several of our children.

I always remember that when I would try to fix up a paper or an art project, she would tell me to "leave well enough alone," but I also remember that she was a stickler for correct spelling. So for the record, I'd like to point out that her name was spelled Marian, with an a.

Haircut!

By Warren Hanson

On Como Avenue, between the drug store and the Lutheran church, over a small storefront hangs a sign that says "St. Anthony Park Barber Stylists," better known to the locals as Park Barbers. Inside, Jim, the proprietor, has been shaving necks, camouflaging bald spots and raising and lowering sideburns for over twenty years. And most of the haircuts Jim has given over those twenty years have ended with a splash of Old Sea Dog hair tonic, a pungent yellow liquid in a clear, long-necked glass bottle with a label bearing the likeness of a weathered sea captain with a pipe clenched in his teeth, wearing a yellow sou'wester, holding fast to his ship's wheel while the brisk ocean spray douses his craggy face. These days, the only customers who make a point of requesting that splash of Old Sea Dog are the tenured professors in the neighborhood, for whom the aromatic tonic represents the only vestige of wild abandon in their otherwise bland and bookish lives.

Next to Jim, at the other barber chair, stands John. John is a young man, not long out of barber school, who represents a different approach to barbering. John doesn't use Old Sea Dog on his customers, but he is well versed in the benefits of Pumpkin Seed Moisturizing Plasma with Protein Zed. It comes in a taupe-colored squeeze bottle bearing a purple silhouette of an android with perfect hair. John had learned a lot about hair chemistry in barber school, but had missed out on some of the other essentials, like Barber Conversation. When he first started, there was usually a lot of silence at John's chair. Jim noticed this and encouraged John to talk to the folks, make them feel welcome and comfortable. Finally John resorted to that time-honored junior high technique of writing hints on the palm of his hand in ball point pen before he came in to work each day. Thereafter, when things got a little quiet and Jim would prod John with a "Pssst," John would glance at his palm and then blurt out, "So, how 'bout those Vikes?" or "So, you goin' deer hunt'n this weekend?"

But that was back when John first started. After a couple of years Jim and John had developed a quiet, comfortable, professional relationship. John came to see the psychological benefits of a splash of Old Sea Dog rubbed into the graying pates of some of the shop's long-time customers, and Jim grew to understand the value of Pumpkin Seed Moisturizing Plasma, especially for hair that had a severe pH imbalance. And so the days at Park Barbers went by in a natural, easy rhythm.

Until one day last spring.

It is fascinating to realize that the smallest, most innocent effects upon our lives.

It was a Saturday, early afternoon. It had been a normal day at Park Barbers, for a Saturday. John was finishing his ninth haircut of the day, a junior seminary student who had a big date that night to study Greek with a female classmate, so he wanted to look extra good. John had gone a bit overboard with the Moisturizing Plasma, and his hands were a little slippery. During the final combing, John's long black comb momentarily escaped from his lubricated fingertips and flew about eighteen inches into the air, executing a perfect double flip before falling back into John's waiting hand. It was over in less than a second, the customer hadn't noticed, so John put the incident out of his mind.

Illustration by Warren Hanson

But Jim had noticed. He had seen the whole thing out of the corner of his eye, which is not the best way to get a good look at anything. For what Jim thought he saw was John doing some kind of flashy, juvenile, show-off stunt, intended to impress the young customer. And it irritated Jim. This was the kind of grandstanding that was common in barber school, when you wanted to prove yourself in front of your peers, but it had no place in a respectable shop like Jim's. So for the rest of the afternoon, unbeknownst to the innocent John, Jim was doing a slow burn.

Finally, at closing time, after the last customer (smelling strongly of Old Sea Dog) had left, John was sweeping up his area when Jim stepped right in front of him, looked him coldly in the eye, and began whirling his barber shears around on his middle finger like a gunslinger, in such a dazzling display of spinning stainless steel as has not been seen since last year's Miss America talent competition. Behind Jim's back, through his legs, over his shoulders flew the scissors, then up into the air, to land perfectly in his back pocket. Then, without saying a word, Jim turned around, put on his coat, and walked out the door, certain in the knowledge that he had put young John in his place and put an end to that kind of nonsense.

John stood in mute astonishment. Had Jim lost his mind? Had one too many brain cells finally succumbed after years of exposure to Old Sea Dog fumes? John locked up and went home to ponder what had come to pass.

Park Barbers is not open on Sundays or Mondays, so John put that time to good use. He had finally concluded that Jim had issued some kind of challenge. So he spent his weekend polishing up the tricks that had won him the title of "Hair Care Hot Dog" back in barber school.

On Tuesday morning, Jim and John greeted each other in their usual manner, but there was a noticeable chill in the air. The first customers came in, and John waited for just the right moment. He grabbed his hair dryer by the cord and started twirling it around like a lariat, spinning it high over his head, then low near the floor, jumping over it like a jump rope and clicking his heels with each leap. This display concluded, he went calmly back to his astonished customer's head without a word.

But Jim had not wasted his weekend either. And soon his bottle of Old Sea Dog went flying and twisting into the air. Jim deftly caught it behind his back, then sent it into a dizzying orbit around his waist, then up into the air again, catching it upside down an inch over his awe-struck customer's head, where the bottle delivered a perfect dose of tonic directly on top of the trembling noggin.

Unnoticed by both barbers, the small group of shaggy customers in the waiting area had all put down their People magazines and were standing and watching the show. As Jim's routine came to its stirring climax with the pouring forth of Old Sea Dog, the small audience burst into wild applause, complete with whistles and hoots of appreciation.

Jim's momentary embarrassment was quickly interrupted when he realized that John had already launched into a saber dance with two straight razors. And so the competition raged the rest of the day.

The next morning, when Jim arrived at the shop at 7:30 to open up, there were already seventeen people waiting to get in.

Now Jim has been in the barber business a long time, and he is no fool. He recognizes a business opportunity when he sees it lined up at his barber shop door.

And so the razzle dazzle continued. And the people kept coming in greater and greater numbers. Jim was shrewd enough not to raise his prices, but he soon had to get a much bigger tip jar. He installed colored lights, and one of those mirrored balls on the ceiling. And he put in gigantic stereo speakers. He replaced those plain white bib things that keep the hair from falling in your lap with new ones of a shiny, foil-like material that looked like it came from the prop room of the old Lost In Space show. And he had pulsating colored light panels installed in the floor.

Jim and John practiced their routines. All day long shears and razors and trimmers and combs whirled and twirled through the air to a disco beat. Even the sweeping up was a synchronized display of aerial broom choreography.

One day the regular weekly issue of People magazine arrived in the shop. But this issue featured Jim and John. On the cover! And it wasn't long until the two barbers found themselves signing the papers for a movie deal — a major motion picture based on the little barber shop in St. Anthony Park that had become a national sensation. The part of Jim would be played by Bryan Brown, and John would be played by Tom Cruise. The producers even signed the Beach Boys to do a song about what fun you could have getting a haircut "...down on Co-o-omo!"

And what happened to Jim and John? Well, they used the money from the movie deal to franchise their barber shop idea. They call their shops "Haircuts & Dreams," and you can find them in shopping malls all across the country.

And Jim and John themselves moved away from the harsh Minnesota winters, to a Caribbean island, where every day they toast their success with colorful drinks adorned with little paper umbrellas and made with a very special ingredient... a splash of Old Sea Dog.

Setting the tone of the neighborhood

Raymond/University arts district proposed

By Michelle Christianson

Communities often develop without the benefit of a plan. The tenor of an area is set by whichever buyers happen to come upon available properties with no direction or input from the community. St. Anthony Park, on the other hand, is now in the position to plan its own future concerning the fate of the University/Raymond area.

On Nov. 8 the St. Anthony Park Community Council passed a motion directing Bobbi Megard, its community organizer, to prepare a grant proposal. The proposal will ask the St. Paul Foundation for funds for a feasibility study concerning the development of an arts district in the University/Raymond area. The study would look at the impact of the arts currently in the area, what spaces are now in use and what spaces will be available in the future, what funding is available (both public and private), what area residents want, what the need for performance space is, and what organizations now in St. Anthony Park are willing to work on making it more of an arts district.

Why an arts district? According to Jack Becker, the Arts Development manager from the St. Paul Office of Planning & Economic Development, St. Anthony Park is already a magnet for artists for a variety of reasons. The community is centrally located, has a lot of under-utilized low-rent warehouse space, and has no parking or zoning problems.

"People who are being forced out of lofts in Minneapolis by skyrocketing rents are interested in coming here," says Becker.

Becker will help draft the grant proposal and can recommend consulting firms to conduct the study. The cost of such a study is between five and ten thousand dollars.

The economic benefits to the community will be considerable. Not only will there be new businesses, but an attractive arts area could bring in dollars from people who will work in the new Westgate development as well as people from other parts of the Twin Cities, according to Megard.

She also sees benefits in creating a more diverse community. "We have an opportunity to reclaim industrial space to commercial and residential use. We can decide what we want our community to be."

Like Becker, Megard thinks that we will be able to plan a more esthetically pleasing area with artistic input right from the beginning. There won't be a need for an artistic "band-aid" after we are fully developed.

Megard named several groups already in the Park who could possibly be interested in moving into a new space. Groups that use St. Anthony Park Elementary School (such as the gymnastics club) might benefit from having more space or greater flexibility in scheduling.

Although the St. Anthony Park School of Dance is comfortable in its present facility, Sonja Hinderlie, manager of the school, can foresee a day when the seminary would want to use the space for something different. In that case, the School of Dance would like to stay in this area, as most of the students come from St. Anthony Park. If they would move to the University/Raymond area, Hinderlie can see exciting possibilities in working with groups in different disciplines; drama and dance, for example, are natural partners.

Of course, the feasibility study is just a beginning, but the prospect of charting the course is an exciting possibility.

Business News

Plans to split the SAP I and SAP Too food co-ops, approved by the membership in August, have been put on hold. Because of questions about the transfer of a non-profit's assets to a co-op, the stores remain a single non-profit corporation. Because of new legislation, there is a possibility that the entire organization, not just SAP Too, may now be converted to co-op status.

The Port Authority has worked out a back-rent payment program which will allow the Sunwood Inn hotel in Energy Park to continue operation through 1990. The hotel is currently $176,000 behind in lease payments.

Happy Holidays at St. Anthony Park Association

St. Anthony Park Community Chorus, directed by Linda Herrman, has a wonderful evening in store for us on Dec. 12—an enchanting program of Christmas and holiday music. Selections will be diverse, from Pachelbel's "Magnificat" to "Let it Snow, Let it Snow." Flutist Katherine Eklund will accompany the chorus. A presentation by Creative Theatre Unlimited will add interest. The chorus welcomes donations for the performance. Cookies will be sold following the concert, just as in previous years. (A great place to buy cookies for any of those special holiday events.) This is a major fundraiser for the chorus, so come, enjoy, contribute, buy cookies. The St. Anthony Park Association Board will be serving dinner—we are even doing the cooking! Come and check out our culinary skills.

Create a winter wonderland with white lights in your trees or bushes. With a little effort, we can create a little magic in the Park from Nov. 1 through March 1. Put up your strings of small, all-white lights before it gets TOO cold. For an added touch of wonder, try a single white electric candle in the window. Lights can be purchased this year at Park Hardware Hank on Como. A little magic can go a long way on a blustery winter night. Try it and see! This great logo was designed by a Park neighbor, Jeanne Schacht.

Methodist Church recognizes Leisure Center

The St. Anthony Park United Methodist Church recognized the Leisure Center, an ecumenical organization for those 60 years and older, on Nov. 26. This recognition was part of the congregation's ongoing centennial celebration.

Eighty-five people were at the first meeting of the Leisure Center in June, 1970. It all happened because Ethel Burtch, a member of the church, consulted Pastor Charles Nelson about developing an organization which would involve members of the five area churches and surrounding community. Each church contributed $15 per month to get the program started, and the United Methodist Church provided the meeting space, which it still does.

Connie Nitsch was hired as the first cook, with the first lunches costing 60 cents per person. There have been a variety of activities—crafts, cards, field trips and, following lunch, programs of many kinds. The center is still flourishing.

A unit of the Minneapolis fire department just happened to be passing, saw the fire, and extinguished it. "If it hadn't been discovered when it was, it could have been quite bad." "It was a senseless act of vandalism," said Jim Norgard, spokesman for Goodwill. School districts plan joint programs

By Kathy Malchow

St. Paul and Roseville school districts are in the initial stages of investigating a voluntary joint integration program. Both school boards approved a draft plan in October. Now the real planning is about to begin.

Roseville school district took the initiative last year to become involved following the St. Paul district's request for participation of other school districts interested in pursuing a joint effort. Sue Cummings, chairperson of the Roseville School Board, said she and others saw a need for expanding Roseville's base of students. "We believe the world is changing and our students have the responsibility to learn to work and live with those of other races and backgrounds," she said. Part of the rationale for the plan is to expand educational opportunities for students from both districts by preparing them to successfully live and work in the 21st century with increased international relationships in economics, government, communication, etc.

It's too soon to say when a joint plan will be implemented, said Cummings. Eleanor Weber, St. Anthony Park resident and member of the St. Paul School Board, believes the absolute earliest she would expect any sort of joint programming is September, 1991. Agreement on an integration plan is scheduled for October, 1990. The Mounds View school district has also taken an interest in participating; its superintendent has been invited to sit in on the planning.

Both Cummings and Weber emphasized that nothing can be decided without state funding. "We have the endorsement of Ruth Randall, the State Commissioner of Education," said Weber, "but we still need to find the funding."

And what would this money be used for? To begin with, said Cummings, public education and teacher education to understand a variety of cultures. She also envisions teacher exchanges between the two districts and recruitment of minority teachers from outside of Minnesota.

Preliminary ideas are that Roseville would begin an elementary school magnet for about 600 students geared toward minority students from St. Paul, with St. Paul providing the transportation. "This would offer students of color the opportunity to attend a magnet school," Weber said. Many minority students are not able to attend magnets now, she continued, because the schools are located in minority neighborhoods. The current magnets recruit white students to come in to restore a school's racial balance.

Cummings said any sort of joint venture will still probably involve movement of the better educated middle class, the ones who know how to use the system. "I'm not sure it will serve the children it would truly benefit the most, and I don't have an answer to how we change that."

All of this is not even close to being finalized. Parental and public input, all-important factors, hasn't yet begun.

The next step calls for another joint meeting between the two school boards in December (perhaps Dec. 5, but this may be changed because of the possibility of the St. Paul teachers' strike) to set up a joint steering committee. The makeup of the committee will be decided then, but it's likely to include about 20 members, half from each district, represented by administration, teachers, support staff, parents, other interested people, and perhaps school board members, according to Weber.

She agrees the task is a very challenging one, and commends Roseville for its voluntary role. "We've had a really good working relationship with the Roseville School Board. Sue Cummings and others have shown real leadership in wanting to decrease the isolation of minority students in St. Paul." Cummings would probably say she sees it as increasing the opportunities for students in Roseville.

Dear Block Nurse,

I've got a few friends in the neighborhood who are Block Nurse Program clients and I may become a client myself at some future date. I'm curious about who pays for these services. Do the clients pay? Do they have insurance or does Medicare and Medicaid support these services?

The St. Anthony Park Block Nurse Program (SAP BNP) can access any third party funds the client may carry or be eligible for — such as Medicare, Medicaid, or private insurance. The remaining amount is paid in full by those clients who have sufficient financial resources. Other clients are eligible for a sliding fee scale and pay what they can afford. The SAP BNP helps pay the costs of those who cannot afford the full fee.

Although there is a perception that our elderly are financially stable and have sufficient health care insurance coverage, this does not hold true for the old-old (those 75+) and the oldest-old (those 85+). Since virtually no public or private insurance pays for home services, those who need nursing and home-maker/home health aide services to remain at home must pay for it themselves. Ironically, if subsidized affordable home care were not available, the only alternative for some clients would be a much costlier nursing home, which federal funding (Medicare) pays in full once the client's resources have been spent down completely.

The financing of long-term care, and particularly home care, is a pressing public policy issue. The direction of change is toward insurance mechanisms in both public and private sectors. We are carefully documenting the effectiveness of the Block Nurse Program and will use our data educatively in this formative period of policy development. We believe the experience and data from the Block Nurse Program will be helpful to policy makers seeking effective alternatives in the delivery and financing of long-term care. Until such change occurs, we must rely increasingly on our neighbors for financial support.

The SAP BNP receives financial support from neighborhood residents and businesses. In the past we have also been generously supported through corporate and foundation grant awards. As our Program is now in its eighth year of serving neighbors, the task of securing funding from foundations is becoming more difficult since their preference is to fund new programs. Neighborhood support must sustain us during this transitional period of public policy change.

Reuter knows how to bee happy

By Truman Olson

One of the reasons your garden, flowers and fruit trees have done so well this year may be hidden down by the railroad tracks in St. Anthony Park. Gary Reuter's hive of bees aided pollination all summer.

Reuter, a hobby beekeeper, became interested in beekeeping years ago when his father had bees at Gary's grandfather's farm near Cannon Falls and later with a family friend near Bloomington. "The friend was getting old so we helped with the heavy work — each hive can weigh up to 90 pounds. That way he was able to keep involved in beekeeping," said Reuter.

Before getting his bees a year ago, Reuter took a course at the University of Minnesota, got a city permit and registered his hives with the state. To get the city permit he had to get approval from all his neighbors within 100 feet. "That wasn't much of a problem, since I told them if there was any difficulty with the bees I would remove them. I also built a solid fence around the hive area to keep children out," said Reuter. "Most of the stings people get are from wasps and hornets. Bees usually don't cause a problem unless you get within 10 feet of their hive or if they feel threatened."

In addition to the hive he has at home, Reuter has four hives at Tamarack Nature Center near White Bear Lake, where he also demonstrates honey extracting. He has also given demonstrations at Langford Recreation Center and at Mounds View School. "Kids really have fun watching the bees," he said.

Reuter had demonstration hives in the beekeeping competition at the Minnesota State Fair where he placed second and third and got a second place in wax judging.

He is a member of the Minnesota Hobby Beekeepers, an organization formed to promote beekeeping. "Eighty percent of Minnesota's beekeepers are hobbyists," said Reuter. "Since bees are one of nature's ways of pollinating plants, agriculture would be in trouble if it weren't for hobby beekeepers."

Photos and illustration by Truman Olson

Gary Reuter displays his observation hive, one for which he doesn't need to don protective gear.

But the thing bees are best known for is their honey, and Reuter's bees produce plenty of that. "We sell our surplus honey to relatives and neighbors. We also make some candles from the wax, though we put most of it back into the hives, since it takes eight pounds of honey to make one pound of wax!"

Beekeeping is not just sitting back and letting the bees do all the work. Hives need to be checked weekly to prevent swarming; they need to be expanded for honey production, honey needs to be extracted, etc., etc.

Next spring, after being wintered in their hives, Gary Reuter's bees will be back on the job producing honey for him and pollinating flowers around the neighborhood for all to enjoy.

A century at St. Matthew's

Photos by Lis Donhowe Christenson
The Right Rev. Robert M. Anderson, Bishop of Minnesota, and the Rev. Grant Abbott, rector of St. Matthew's Episcopal Parish, prepare for the church's centennial consecration service.

By Mary Mergenthal

When one realizes that St. Anthony Park celebrated its centennial in 1988, one shouldn't be surprised that churches here might be that old, too. But when you read the history of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church what is, in some ways, surprising is not that the congregation began 100 years ago, but that it survived.

Regular services began in July, 1888, and were held in the Congregational Church. On Dec. 20, 1888, the parish was officially organized and named St. Matthew's Parish.

The congregation was never, it seems, distinguished by its size, but rather by its vigor. But small size did make for small income and the early years of the parish were characterized by sizeable debt.

In July, 1889, St. Matthew's was placed under the care of a recently ordained deacon, the Rev. C. Edgar Haupt. Under his guidance a church building was built on the spot now occupied by a house at 1264 Knapp Place. The value of the lot was $1,500 and the church, a small frame building with seating capacity of 100, was valued at $1,400. During the next 25 years a number of improvements and additions were made to the church. Those changes cost it seems, was too great for his undertaking. His achievements in the Diocese were well-known, and the bishop said of him, "Rev. Haupt has a habit of doing things."

It seems that is almost an understatement, and the ongoing strength of St. Matthew's Parish is a clear demonstration of his action. When he became rector, Dr. Haupt set a goal to get St. Matthew's out of debt. With the aid of the vestry he made a complete canvass of the parish, securing pledges to pay the entire indebtedness of the church by the following Easter. The mortgage was paid in full on June 17, 1910.

But given the vision and needs of the parish, and the energy of Dr. Haupt, that wasn't call to stop. In 1913 two lots on the southeast corner of Carter and Chelmsford were purchased for $1,975, and almost paid for with the cash on hand.

The cost of building materials for the new church and labor was kept to a minimum by entertaining bids and accepting the lowest. Again, Dr. Haupt was in the thick of it. It seems that besides his more money and the congregation sometimes found itself unable to support a rector.

St. Matthew's to 12

The Rev. Dr. Haupt returned to the parish in 1909 to begin a rectorship that would last 25 years. He was an ambitious man for whom no task, Nate Christopherson and other young people at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church prepare for the special centennial service Nov. 5.

Best wishes for the holidays.

experience as a rector and his service as Archdeacon of the Diocese, he had extensive experience in church building and the lumber industry, so he acted as superintendent of construction. The first services in the present church were held on Sun., Oct. 4, 1914.

A fortunate turn of events for Dr. Haupt and St. Matthew's was the relocation of the Breck School in St. Anthony Park. The school had originally been located near Windom, Minn. In 1909, it was forced to close due to dwindling enrollment and a floating debt of $4,000. The school property was sold and the school was relocated near the Agricultural School of the University of Minnesota. In so doing, the original purpose of the school, namely, to provide an inexpensive education for the sons and daughters of farm families, was preserved, and a feeder school for the Agricultural School was created. It's likely no surprise that the ever-present and always-able Dr. Haupt served as superintendent of Breck School, thus tying the parish and the school closely together and providing the parish with a rectory.

Much later, during the '50s, a significant action of the parish was St. Matthew's Dining Hall at the State Fair—an undertaking which took endless planning and work but which benefitted the congregation's financial well-being significantly.

In 1988, 100 years after its incorporation, the Church of St. Matthew, Episcopal, has 123 households, 285 baptized members and 209 communicants. In 1888 there were 26 families.

The congregation began its centennial celebration with a Consecration Service on All Saints Day, Nov. 5, with the Right Rev. Robert M. Anderson, Bishop of Minnesota officiating.

At the parish's annual meeting on Jan. 28, 1990, an historic church service is planned using 1892 Prayer Books and period music, with clergy, choir, and parishoners dressed in period costumes. Denis and Bev Dailey are busy planning that event.

Marge and Harold Alexander and Maggie and Robert Moulton are planning the Shrove Tuesday dinner and melodrama Feb. 27. It will feature music from the turn-of-the-century, including "The Temperance Cantata."

At the April 6 centennial choir concert the choir will perform Fauré's "Requiem" and "Gloria," by Twin Cities composer and baritone, Terry Burk, commissioned in honor of the centennial.

The entire community will be invited to the Mother's Day Ice Cream Social and maypole festivities, chaired by Brian Waibel.

On June 3, tea and croquet will be featured at the special centennial open house being planned by Arla Savage and Megan Randall.

Management is in the process of designing an approximately 16-unit apartment building with tuck-under garages for each unit. These apartments would be built to replace the units torn down for the expansion of Twin City Testing on Pelham Blvd., and would be built partly with government funding designed for "replacement housing." It's uncertain yet how many dollars the project will receive.

Tim Bleed, owner of the house north of Terado, says he has signed the papers and is satisfied with the price he will receive to sell. "But the ball is in their court [Wellington's] now," he said. "They can back out of the deal for many reasons because there are so many contingencies." These include soil testing, spot rezoning from industrial to multiple residential, buying Terado, federal financing, and completing city approvals. Bleed said closing on his house is scheduled for no later than March 1.

Schumacher contends rezoning will not be a problem, though what that takes is approval from 60% of the surrounding homeowners. "The people on Everett Court have been very helpful and enthused about the residential development over the last several months," she says. "They eagerly await the improvements in that area." She does not foresee any problems with soil testing, either.

Improvements at the intersection involve more than the Wellington projects, however. The St. Anthony Park Community Council has decided one of its main priorities, too, is the revitalization of this intersection. To complement the proposed housing and the retail strip, the council has recently submitted a proposal to the city's Neighborhood Development Office for a Neighborhood Partnership Program (NPP) grant, asking for $200,000 to be earmarked for improvements. "Partner" monies would come from the financing Wellington is counting on to construct the apartments, so if the housing project falls through, "we can bail out of the Neighborhood Partnership deal if we can't come up with a match," said Bobbi Megard, Community Organizer for District 12.

Whether St. Anthony Park is awarded the city money will be decided in March by the City Council, Megard continued. This is the 13th cycle of NPP grants. St. Anthony Park has been awarded one before, in 1984, for bus shelters on Como Ave. It's the impression of many that this year's request has a good chance of being among the finalists. In the last round of awards, six city projects were given money out of 19 applications. The City Council could decide to award only part of the $200,000 request, too. In that case, the Community Council has its priorities in order:

1) $60,000 toward housing rehabilitation on Everett Court. This would provide matching grants of up to $7,500 each for the eight residences on Everett Court. The grants are designed for low and moderate income homeowners.

2) $30,000 to provide landscaping for some passive green space on the new triangle of land created on the southwest corner of Energy Park Drive/Raymond Ave. when the two streets were straightened last year.

3) $90,000 for lantern lamps in the area surrounding the intersection up to the new bridge, including on Everett Court.

With so many contingencies and uncertainties yet to be unraveled, it's too soon to say how many of these projects will become realities. The surest bet is that residents of St. Anthony Park and passers-by will be able to buy food and gas at that corner by this time next year.

It looks likely that this new mountain in St. Anthony Park will stay for the winter—though it won't be used for sliding. Though Park Service owner Nick Mayer certainly didn't choose to have this happen during the service station's busiest time of year, he is going to have to "grin & bear" the inconvenience, as are his customers who will still be able to get gas and service even though "getting there may not be half the fun."

Brooks lived in St. Anthony Park at 1140 Gibbs from 1947 until 1959, and again lived in the Park from 1970-75 until his retirement from the Burlington Northern Railroad.

He says life in Sydney is "very much the same as in the United States," but he misses fall colors, the Thanksgiving observance, and a white Christmas.

Homes in University Grove may no longer be owned exclusively by University faculty, if the University administration gets its way. The plan is to recruit faculty by offering higher salaries rather than offering the availability of housing.

Change faces "The Grove"

The University of Minnesota Board of Regents will discuss the possibility of changes in ownership structure at University Grove at its next meetings on Dec. 7 & 8.

For 60 years the Grove has been a quiet neighborhood of homes built by University architects and owned exclusively by University faculty. Many students become acquainted with "The Grove" when they ride the famous 13G intercampus bus (G is for Grove).

Consider, then, the possibility of students renting homes in the Grove—something that could become a reality if the proposed changes occur.

The University wants to pull out of its ownership of Grove lots and sell them to the homeowners for $13,000 each, thus allowing future sale of the homes to the general public. Rationale behind this thinking is said to be financially motivated. The University says it wants to have more accessible funds in its Permanent University Fund, the fund that is set aside for recruitment of new faculty. It's in this same fund that the mortgages and land for Grove homes lie.

There is controversy among current owners whether "opening up" the Grove would be desirable. Some think it would be good to make the neighborhood more diverse and like the idea of being able to sell their homes to their children, while others fear an onslaught of swimming pools (not now allowed) and/or renters.

Twenty-seven Grove residents (there are 102 total homes) signed a petition in November indicating their opposition to the University's current proposals. The University is also attempting to pinpoint the sentiments of the owners by circulating a questionnaire. Whether any changes in ownership do occur will likely be decided in 1990.

Kris Hogenson of St. Anthony Park was one of four young people chosen by the city of St. Paul's Park & Recreation Department to receive top honors as Youth Volunteers for 1989. She was chosen as an Honored Youth Volunteer from 84 Youth-Volunteers-of-the-Month nominees.

Hogenson has donated many hours to Langford Recreation Center assisting in coaching floor hockey and baseball. She has also helped with office work and seasonal events. "Her unselfishness toward others has made Kris one of the favorites among the Langford staff. She's the greatest!" commented Lori Sundelius, director at Langford. Kris expressed her happiness in being chosen for this special award: "I was really happy. I consider myself lucky for being chosen. I think more people should volunteer. I've been a volunteer for a long time, and I really like it," she said.

She was presented with a letter of commendation from Senator Durenberger and a letter of recognition signed by Governor Perpich. KDWB radio gave her a ticket to see the Nov. 29 Rolling Stones concert. She was chauffeured in a limousine for a courtesy dinner at Mancini's, then escorted to the Rolling Stones concert at the Metrodome.

Hogenson is a student at Como Park High School.

Gail Brinkmeier, a student at Como Park High School, was selected as a 1989 St. Paul YWCA Leader Luncheon Outstanding Junior Leader. She is one of 36 young women from high schools in Ramsey, Dakota and Washington Counties to be recognized by the YWCA for exceptional leadership and service in school/community activities.

Brinkmeier, who lives in St. Anthony Park, will be honored at the tenth annual YWCA Leader Luncheon on Dec. 7, at the Radisson St. Paul Hotel. She will be presented an award certificate and participate in a leadership development workshop.

15 VS 30 YEAR MORTGAGE

Among the diverse home financing options, is the 15-year mortgage. It has been very popular depending on the difference in interest rates between the 15 and 30-year mortgages. If the spread is small, there is not that much difference between the two.

Perhaps the most attractive features of the 15-year mortgage are a lower interest rate, more rapid equity buildup and lower total interest payments over the life of the loan. However, the 15-year loan also has some drawbacks.

While home buyers might save more in interest, their monthly payments would be greater. Also, the 15-year mortgage might not be the best instrument for borrowers who move before their loans reach maturity. Because most people do not live in their homes for the duration of their mortgage loans, it might make sense to examine interest savings over THAT time frame. Since monthly payments are higher, homeowners might want to explore whether the extra money could be better invested. Getting a 30-year mortgage and making additional payments at will may serve the same purpose but not enslave you to higher payments.

If there is anything we can do to help you in the field of real estate, please call Edina Realty, 2803 Lincoln Drive, Phone: 636-3760. We're here to help!

Central High School

For Central students, the month of December holds promises of a two-week winter break, a semi-formal dance, and a holiday week to celebrate the season. Another issue that students and staff alike are following is the threat of a citywide teachers' strike. On Nov. 19, the teachers voted to strike by a 9-1 margin. The teachers are planning to strike for better pay and benefits. The strike might occur anytime in December. This strike would literally shut down St. Paul Public Schools. The strike would put any or all of the following plans in jeopardy.

The student council started out the tradition of giving and festivities of the holiday season by collecting over 1000 cans for a food drive. The goods will go to a food shelf to feed Minnesotans in need. The student council is led by a group of students, the management team, who are elected by their peers. Two Park residents, Kari Nelsestuen and Zack Steven are on this team. Zack is the co-chair of the Policy Development committee, and also holds the position of treasurer. Kari is the president of the student council this year. Both are responsible for heading Holiday Week and helping to bring the dance together. Kari states the dance "should be a fun activity for students, as well as a good excuse to dress up." The dance will be bringing a new tradition to Holiday Week.

Academically, the Honor Society will be having its fall membership drive. Park resident Amy Landa is the vice president of this group. Membership requires a 3.3 grade point average for three semesters. The society has meetings each month and sponsors activities such as tutoring after school, a literary magazine, and freshman mentorship (by upperclassmen). Amy Landa and Caitlin Murdock were named National Merit Semi-Finalists through their P-SAT scores. This is an honor a select number of people nationwide receive. This should qualify them for scholarships at schools throughout the nation.

Five Park residents were named Commended students in the National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test: Matt Feigal, Erika Hovland, Mara Krinke, Elizabeth Payne and Benjamin Warde.

Winter sports have just begun at Central. Students can participate in swimming (M), basketball (W,M), hockey (mostly M), gymnastics (W), and cross-country skiing (W,M). The cross-country ski team looks to have a shot at some big titles, but as we learn from past experiences, anything can happen.

At the very least, December holds promise of excitement.

The threat of a teachers' strike and the upcoming vacation create definite tension and thrill in the air.

Mara Krinke

J. J. Hill

The fourth graders of J. J. Hill had a very exotic and exciting Halloween. They were dressed as people from the Medieval times. They had a roasted pig and lots of other good things to eat. There was a juggler and also decorations that they made. In fifth grade, the students just finished their leaf booklets and have started on their heritage booklets. Also the fifth graders are having a D.A.R.E. (drug awareness resistance education) program to teach kids about drugs.

Akesa Mafi

St. Anthony Park Elementary

At the end of October Jim Scheibel and Bob Fletcher visited St. Anthony Park and talked to students grades 3-6 about different issues in St. Paul. Also in November students began taking their annual trips to the Como Planetarium.

During early December students will have a Beach Day on Dec. 8 and S.A.P. T-shirts and sweatshirts will be coming out. The teachers of St. Anthony Park will be going on strike Dec. 5 if an agreement is not made before then.

School News from 17

Girls are starting basketball and boys begin wrestling.

On Tues., Nov. 14, Tiffany Bell, Kristin Ulstad, and Daniel Larson spent a day at the Earle Brown Conference Center attending a conference on youth community service. At the "Growing Hope" conference, teachers from around the nation spoke about programs in their schools that promote community service among young people.

The Book Fair at Murray will be held Dec. 4-7. During the fair students will come to the library during their English classes for the chance to buy books and posters. A list that shows all the books and items to be sold will be available. The profits from the Book Fair will go toward new materials for the Media Center at Murray. The Book Fair will be open to the public during regular school hours.

Christmas is fast approaching, and that means the Winter Concert is also coming up. It will take place on Dec. 21 at 7 p.m. It will be a great success if other years are any indication. The concert will feature Murray's own concert and beginning bands playing a variety of music. The conductor of both bands is Mr. T. J. Nolan.

Holy Childhood

Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE) aimed at fifth graders began in October. Holy Childhood had the honor of representing the nonpublic sector in the Red Ribbon Campaign, a public demonstration creating positive peer pressure about drug-free choices. Public officials including Chief of Police, William McCutcheon, and Councilmember Bill Wilson, were present at the ceremony.

The fifth through eighth grade members of the Holy Childhood Schola/Cantorum performed at the St. Paul Cathedral along with five other Twin Cities musical organizations to honor "St. Paul's First Lady of Music," Mary Downey.

The junior high students toured the Minnesota Center for Book Arts.

On Nov. 9, students of grades 4, 5, & 6 participated in a one-day outdoor education seminar at the Belwin Nature Center.

A costumed actor portraying Cass Gilbert visited Holy Childhood to entertain and inform the students about the changing skyline of St. Paul.

Bob Bartlett from the Catholic Youth Ministry Services spoke at the Home and School Association meeting on current moral issues.

The kindergarten class served its annual Thanksgiving breakfast to pastor, Father Doffing and principal, Sister Annabelle.

Como Park High School

Winter sports at Como are under way, with at least one student from St. Anthony Park on each team. Playing hockey this year are sophomore David Berglund, junior Joe Reuter, and seniors Scott Kroona and Hans Neve. Kara Hirdman, an eighth grader, is participating on Como's gymnastics team. Sophomore Derek Martin is wrestling. Seniors Heather Nielsen, Josh Larson, and junior Colin Hirdman are playing basketball. Josh, however, will be out for a few weeks because he broke one of his knuckles while shooting baskets. Sophomore Nate Larsen and senior Dave Davis are on the boys' swim team, and senior Martin McKay is diving this year.

Senior Marianne Hanlon is a semifinalist for the National Merit Scholarship, and the corporation has recognized Dave Davis as a commended student.

The St. Paul Dept. of Parks & Rec. has elected senior Kris Hogenon as one of its four Volunteers of the Year. Each month, the recreation center nominates a Volunteer of the Month who has contributed a minimum of 40 hours of volunteer work. From this group, four Volunteers of the Year are chosen and rewarded with a fancy dinner and a free ticket to the Rolling Stones.

Como Park Girls' Tennis Team is the 1989 Academic State Champion. The team has a combined grade point average of 3.97, which is higher than any other tennis team in the state. This is the first year for the academic excellence award in Minnesota. The award was given by the Minnesota Coaches Association for girls' sports along with the Minnesota State High School League. Coach is Kathy Dumas.

Gail Brinkmeyer also deserves recognition for the Outstanding Junior Leadership award she has received from the YWCA. This honor, like Kris's, is based on community service. Being a Girl Scout, Gail has done her share of volunteering, including working as a counselor at Girl Scout camps in the summer.

Como's School Site council, a group of Como parents, students, and staff concerned with the improvement of our school, will be meeting with the School Board on Dec. 19. It will request money for physical improvements at Como that have been neglected for a long time. Some of these problems are safety matters, such as the absence of speed bumps in the driveway, the lack of proper lighting in the parking lots, and the bottleneck area between the commons and the west wing of the school (this could be a fire hazard). Paint is also badly needed, and the group plans to discuss the possible restructuring of the athletic fields. It also feels that a "Como Park High School" sign is needed on Maryland, so that visitors will be able to find our school more easily.

Como has recently welcomed a new English teacher, Judy Petrie.

Como's choir club will be holding a winter concert on Dec. 14, 7 p.m., in the auditorium.

The Mistletoe Dance is set for Dec. 15 and the band concert is Dec. 21 at 7 p.m.

Using credit wisely can benefit you.

This time of year, many people are getting ready for the holidays—baking cookies, planning to visit family and friends, buying gifts. It's also a time when people use their credit to put holiday plans into place.

When used properly, credit can:

- "smooth out" overall spending,
- save you money by allowing you to take advantage of big sales,
- offer convenience, such as when dining out or traveling.

If credit is improperly used, problems can occur. Warning signs include when monthly charges often exceed payments, when credit card advances are used for loan payments, when running short of cash becomes routine or when saving is impossible.

Tips on using credit.

Credit Cards. Their biggest advantage is availability. Use credit cards for shopping buys; or when you find that perfect gift, don't want to wait until payday and risk that it might be gone. Credit cards are great, too, for mail order and travel.

Checking Account Credit. A credit line on your checking account allows your credit to go often where a credit card is not accepted. It also provides overdraft protection. Checking credit is great for smaller amounts of borrowing.

Line of Credit. If you wish credit for larger ticket items, consider a special revolving line of credit account. Such an account can let you use funds, repay them, then use the credit again—without having to reapply. It's perfect for more expensive gifts or such items as airline tickets.

First Bank offers VISA® and MasterCard®; Checking Plus, which features a credit line; and First Line,™ a revolving credit account. We also offer a full range of other credit products, including installment and home equity loans.

Our personal bankers can provide information about your credit options. Why not call or stop by today to find out how credit can really work for you?

Thanks for your business!

All of us at First Bank Midway wish you a safe and happy holiday season. We're proud to work with you to promote and strengthen the Midway area as a great place to live and work. We appreciate your business!

Chorus from 16

group, directed by Linda Herrman, sings a variety of numbers, including Johann Pachelbel's recently-discovered "Magnificat in G." This piece features harpsichord, played by Susan Lindball. The choir will also perform a variety of familiar Christmas tunes such as "Go Tell It On the Mountain," "Let It Snow! Let It Snow! Let It Snow!" and a medley of "Santa Claus is Comin' to Town."

Another artist featured on the concert program will be flutist Katherine Eklund who will play several solos as well as accompany the choir. In addition, actor Charles Numrich will present a dramatic reading entitled "Christmas Memories."

Dinner tickets are $5 for Association members, $6 for non-members. Admission to the concert is by donation. To reserve tickets, call Jan Meyer at 647-9104.

Chorus members would also like to invite all would-be Christmas carolers to join them in a Christmas sing-along sponsored by the St. Anthony Park Library Association. The event will take place at 7 p.m. on Mon., Dec. 18, in front of the St. Anthony Park Library.

Handel's "Messiah"

The choir of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church in St. Anthony Park will perform Handel's "Messiah" on Fri., Dec. 15 at 8 p.m. at the church at 2136 Carter Ave. J. Michael Compton is organist-choirmaster. Advance tickets are $7 (call 870-0049), tickets for students and seniors are $5, tickets at the door are $8.

Caroling around the tree

Come join neighbors for the Second Annual St. Anthony Park Community Carol Sing on the library corner of Como and Carter at 7 p.m. on Mon., Dec. 18.

Depending on the windchill factor, caroling will continue around the tall lighted tree for half an hour and everyone is invited inside the library for hot cider, cookies, and more singing and jingling of sleigh bells.

The St. Anthony Park Branch Library Association and the St. Anthony Park Community Chorus invite you to sing together the old familiar songs as well as some more modern ones. If you have a favorite winter song, enjoy it at the library in good company. Men, women, children—come and sing together.

South St. Anthony Rec Center

Join the Holiday Program on Thurs., Dec. 21, 4:30 p.m. Youth, grades 7 and younger, will enjoy crafts, treats, and a visit from Santa. Adults are welcome and encouraged to attend with their children.

Flooding a general skating rink will begin Dec. 15, weather permitting. It takes about a week of flooding and cold weather to get appropriate ice. Volunteers are needed to help with the flooding. Skate changing facilities will be open Mon. through Thurs., 4:30-8:30 p.m. Outdoor lighting will be turned on during evening hours.

Winter brochures featuring winter activities will be available on request after Dec. 15. Brochures include information on classes, field trips and special events. Upcoming classes include snacks, gym games and crafts. For more information, call South St. Anthony, Mon.-Thurs., 4-9 p.m., 298-5770.

Obituaries

Isabell Harvey

Former St. Anthony Park resident, Isabell Harvey, died on Nov. 4, 1989, at the age of 91, after a long illness. She was the wife of Dr. Alfred Harvey, retired professor of animal husbandry at the St. Paul Campus of the University of Minnesota. Dr. Harvey was also the superintendent of the horse show each year at the Hippodrome at the Minnesota State Fair.

After their marriage in 1921, the Harveys lived on Hythe St. and later on Carter Ave. before building their own home in 1927 on the corner of Hythe & Dudley. This was their home for the next 44 years, until they retired to Roseville in 1971. Mrs. Harvey lived at Langton Place Home for the last two years of her life.

Isabell Harvey was active in the St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ and was a Camp Fire leader for many years. She enjoyed playing the piano and making articles for church bazaars, such as Christmas decorations and Raggedy Ann dolls. She was known as a gracious hostess and entertained often.

Preceded in death by her son, Frank, she is survived by her husband; her daughter, Marian Carlson of Roseville, five grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

Lowell Satre

Lowell Satre, retired professor of Greek, Latin and the New Testament at Luther Northwestern Theological Seminary, died of cancer on Nov. 4, 1989, at age 72. He lived in St. Anthony Park.

Satre, a native of Jewell, Iowa, graduated from Luther Seminary in 1945, and was ordained that year. He served congregations in Washington state and Iowa and taught at Pacific Lutheran University and Concordia College before returning to Luther Northwestern, where he taught for 38 years. David Tiede, president of Luther Northwestern, and a student and later faculty colleague of Satre, said Satre was known for his concern for students.

He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth; daughters, Gloria Ristvedt of Watertown, S.D., and Gracia Look of St. Paul; sons, Lowell Jr. of St. Anthony Park and Daniel, River Falls, Wis.; brother, the Rev. Carroll Satre of Minneapolis; three sisters; and ten grandchildren.

New Greenwing Recycling Center to aid Raptor Center

America's endangered eagles, hawks and other birds had a better chance for survival when the new Greenwing Recycling Center at 775 Rice St., St. Paul, began accepting aluminum cans and other recyclable material Nov. 1.

Greenwing Recycling Center, a division of Super Cycle, Inc., has joined with The Raptor Center at the University of Minnesota in a campaign to "Save Our Birds." During the months of November and December Greenwing is donating to the Raptor Center two cents per pound of aluminum cans redeemed by recyclers.

The Raptor Center at the University of Minnesota's College of Veterinary Medicine specializes in the treatment and rehabilitation of birds of prey. Since its inception in 1972, the Raptor Center has received more than 6,000 injured raptors from 37 states, most recently from Alaska.

"Helping preserve our natural resources is what recycling is all about," says Tom Glander, president of Super Cycle, Inc. and director of Greenwing Recycling Center. "With all the concern about saving landfill space and incineration of trash, we sometimes forget that recycling does much more than help control the costs of waste management. Recycling helps reduce our energy dependency thus saving energy resources. Plus, recycling helps us to maintain a cleaner environment, helping ensure the survival of all earth's creatures."

The Greenwing Recycling Center accepts aluminum and bi-metal cans, PET plastic and HDPE plastic. The center is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Mon.-Sat. For price and other information, call Greenwing Recycling Center at 224-8054.
