Betsy Cole, chair of the board of Quality Tool, is pleased to have a full shop of workers to replace former employees who have been on strike since last fall.

Strike doesn't stop Quality Tool

By Mary Mergenthal

Last month, the Bugle ran a story about the seven month strike of union workers at Quality Tool, a metal stamping and fabrications plant on Raymond Ave. That article presented information about the strike, based on an interview with the union steward. Now, having had the opportunity to speak to the company's owners, we would like to present more details of this story—a long and painful experience for many people.

There are differing interpretations of the events leading to the strike at Quality Tool.

One item about which Quality Tool board chair Betsy Cole and William H. Roe, president, are very definite is that they made it clear to workers that Quality Tool could not afford a strike. When negotiations reached a standstill, the owners offered interest arbitration.

"In interest arbitration, each side gives its best shot and a third party chooses," said Betsy Cole.

"This [interest arbitration] has never been done in Minnesota before, because no company wants to lock the union in," said Cole. "The international union, the local and the committee recommended the contract we offered. When that happens, it's unheard of to strike, but our workers chose to strike anyway."

The strikers insist that Quality Tool management was trying to "bust the union." Cole insists: "There's a difference between supporting labor and supporting the union. There never was a wage cut. We offered to pay based on job skill, not seniority. We offered training. Suggesting interest arbitration was the most non-union busting option possible."

South St. Anthony parents fight for buses

By Phil Holt

Students who live in South St. Anthony Park within a mile of St. Anthony Park Elementary School may have to walk to school next year. Students were previously bused to school because the old Raymond Avenue bridge was considered dangerous by school district transportation officials. The new bridge is now finished and the district feels that next year children in that area should walk to school.

Parents Paula Almer and Kathy Badger recently organized a meeting of 26 people at St. Cecilia's Catholic Church to discuss their reasons for wanting the busing to continue. They are concerned that students will have to cross the intersection of Raymond Ave. and Energy Park Drive.

The latest count by the City of St. Paul shows that at least 22,263 vehicles go through that intersection each day.

Mark Baloga, who represented City Councilperson Paula Maccabee, said the construction of the proposed University Transit Way and possible commercial development at the intersection could markedly increase construction and traffic through the intersection.

Other safety issues were discussed, including the lack of pedestrian railings on the Raymond Avenue bridge, the limited visibility around the area of the viaduct, the access to the railroad tracks and the lack of "safe homes" along the industrial section of Raymond Avenue. Parents maintain that all these hazards would be too much for sixth grade student crossing guards to handle.

Mr. Harold Turnquist of St. Paul Public School Transportation Department attended the meeting to listen to concerns. He stated that according to state law, the district must transport children if they live two or more miles away from school and has an option to transport children who live one mile from school. If there are "extremely hazardous traffic conditions," according to Turnquist, the district may choose to bus children within one mile.

Rep. Alice Hausman commented on the meeting. "I saw a good exchange between the Transportation Department and the parents," citing the note-taking by the transportation officials. She recommended talking with the School Board. "I think we need to specifically look at the guidelines."

School Board member Eleanor Weber echoes the concern of the parents, "I believe that busing is going to continue. I think a need still exists."

The parents are planning to get the issue on the agenda of the June District 625 School Board meeting.

What's missing from this picture?

If you said, "daylilies, blue spruce, and historic railings from the old bridge," you're thinking along the same lines as the Council, which will launch a community landscaping project for the new Raymond Avenue bridge this summer. The project is called "Bloomin' Bridges," and volunteers are needed to plant and care for conifers and hardy perennials on the southwest approach to the bridge.

To lend an historic touch to the project, sections of the old railing will be used in this and several other nearby sites. Activities will include a planting session, weekly waterings, and a project picnic. No previous gardening experience is needed, and volunteers will be assisted by master gardeners. Participation is open and accessible to all members of the community; hours and amount of participation are flexible.

The project should be lots of fun and give community members—both individuals and families—an opportunity to work together to add a touch of beauty and history to a very important community landmark. Participants will also learn about drought-resistant planting to protect the environment. For more information about this and other community plantings for which the council needs volunteers, call 292-7884.

Bookstart

Bookstart is a program in which 4-6-year-olds discover the fun and joy of reading. Several stories will be read each day along with activities to promote creativity and imagination. Classes are June 18-July 26 on M, T, W, Th from 9-10:30 a.m. (No class Wed., July 3). Register by calling the community council office (292-7884), or in person on June 12 from 9-11 a.m. at the So. St. Anthony Rec. Center.

The program is looking for junior and senior high school students who would like to share some time with the children in the program. This would involve helping out with crafts and activities along with a chance to use imagination and creativity to help children discover what fun books can be. To help, please call Lesley Garrett at 645-5965. Scheduling is flexible—for example, every Monday. (6 sessions)

Used books in good condition for use by the youngsters in the program are welcome. Books should be suitable for ages 4-6. Cash donations will help buy new books for each child to take home at the end of the sessions. All donations are tax-deductible. Make your contributions to: St. Anthony Park Community Council, Bookstart Program, 890 Cromwell Ave., St. Paul, MN 55114.

Two crime prevention positions available

Part-time (20 hours/week) position for CrimeWatch and Outreach Organizer to coordinate crime prevention efforts and the blockworker network in St. Anthony Park.

Part-time (10-15 hours/week) position to coordinate commercial CrimeWatch project in North St. Anthony Park commercial area.

For both positions, send resumé and cover letter by June 15 to: Roberta Megard, Community Organizer, St. Anthony Park Community Council, 890 Cromwell, St. Paul, MN 55114 or call 292-7884. (One individual may hold both positions.)

Highschoolers, take note

Are you interested in your neighborhood and in addressing issues involving those who live in St. Anthony Park? The Human Services Committee of the Council is looking for teens to serve on this committee.

The Committee is anxious to involve high school students. This is an excellent opportunity to get involved in your community, give insight into the needs of the student population, and meet community involvement requirements for graduation.

If you are interested and would like more information, call Lesley Garrett, Human Services Committee Chair, 645-5965, or Bobbi Megard, Community Organizer, 292-7884.

Recycling report

During the month of April, there was a notable rise in the amount of recycling picked up curbside in St. Paul. The St. Paul Neighborhood Energy Consortium (NEC) reported that in March, 669 tons of recyclables were picked up curbside in the neighborhoods that they serve. In April the total was 755 tons. Each month curbside pickup makes small gains; however, tonnage went up 13% for the month of April.

"We usually see a significant rise in recycling participation after any large promotional mailing," reported Martha McDonell from the NEC. "During the end of February and in March we mailed out the 1990 neighborhood calendars and stickers. People have really responded positively to the recent neighborhood promotion and to the environmental concerns raised during Earth Week."

Curbside recycling tonnage in our neighborhood, District 12, was: 32.8 tons in Jan., 33.9 tons in Feb., 39.8 tons in March, and 33.7 tons in April.

For more information about the curbside recycling program in our neighborhood, call the St. Paul Neighborhood Energy Consortium at 644-SORT or 292-7884.

RECYCLING DAY, AUG. 8, WILL BE COMBINED WITH A COLLECTION OF CANNED GOODS FOR THE MERRIAM PARK EMERGENCY FOOD SHELF. RESIDENTS MAY PUT FOOD SHELF DONATIONS ON THE CURB ALONG WITH THEIR RECYCLING AND THEY WILL BE PICKED UP BY SUPER CYCLE. COMMUNITY VOLUNTEERS WILL THEN COLLECT THE ITEMS AND DELIVER DONATIONS TO MERRIAM PARK COMMUNITY CENTER. WATCH FOR MORE INFORMATION IN THE JULY ISSUE OF THE BUGLE.

Editorial/Commentary

He's been a pal

When I was a kid in school, my spelling teacher used to find ways to help us learn the things she knew we'd need to know forever. One was principle ends in "le" because it's a rule. "You can always remember the other one, because the principal is your pal.

She was right. It's been helpful to know about principles and I have been helped by knowing a principal who's a pal.

Principal John McManus of Murray Junior High School is retiring any day now. The community is losing a pal. If you've had kids at Murray during Mr. McManus' tenure, you know it's true. He's been a principal who knew kids by name, who cared about the ups and downs of their lives, who enjoyed them.

He's also been a principal who cared intensely about this community and about the school's place in it. He pushed hard for Site Management, knowing that a school is better if decision-making is closer to home.

He's been rightfully proud of the quality programs Murray offers—and he's made sure that success is shared with others.

Even if you never knew Mr. McManus, know now that you're losing a pal... one who made a difference in this community in quiet, intentional ways.

We'll miss you, John. We wish you well.

Vote for buses

We're pleased that St. Paul School District officials seem to be willing to listen to the valid concerns of South St. Anthony Park parents. We hope that those officials will share that concern for the safety of children with the School Board and that the School Board will vote to continue busing so six-year-old kindergartners won't have to brave the perils of a dangerous intersection on their way to St. Anthony Park Elementary School.

Diving into the dumpster

By Joel Schurke

Author's note: This article is the first of a three part series on solid waste. The intent of this series is to provide a bit of insight and analysis on the very personal issue of garbage. Concerns of the environment are a very popular media topic currently and all too often the coverage given to specifics is too short. The viewer or reader is made aware of the existence of a problem but is left without a sense of what can or what needs to be done to work toward a solution. The objective of this series is to dive a little deeper into the dumpster and take some of the mystery out of a few technical, economic and political aspects of the solid waste issue.

For those for whom this information is new, I hope that it provides an impetus for action. For those for whom this is old-hat, I hope the bibliographies serve as a stimulus for renewed interest.

Just imagine 75 acres of pizza, 190,000 watches, 50,000 TV's, 62,500,000 newspapers or 2,740,000 disposable diapers. Hard to fathom isn't it? But this is only a small, very small part of what we in the U.S. consume each day and it all contributes to our solid waste stream.

The use of the word stream to describe the flow of municipal solid waste just doesn't quite cut it. Describing solid waste production as a swelling, flooding river that is about to peak is more appropriate. It reflects a reality from which we have been conveniently protected by the garbage man and his compactor truck. By providing quick and inexpensive removal of the seven bags of garbage each average household contributes weekly, disposability has become a way of life.

The Fresh Kills landfill in Staten Island, New York, receives New York City's daily load of 24,000 tons. This island landfill was a valley in 1948 when the landfill opened. Now these waste mounds rise 250 feet above the island. And from beneath these growing monuments ooze 2 million gallons of leachate (the liquid seeping from the contents of the landfill) each and every day.

By comparison to the recent past, today's new landfills are marvels of modern engineering. With triple liners to keep leachate from escaping and leachate collection systems to collect any that does, groundwater supplies are far safer than before. The only problem is there aren't any new landfills.

Siting landfills is a process that ranks in popularity with raising taxes. No one really wants one in their neighborhood, so the siting process usually stalls when decision makers decide and announce candidate sites. Such announcements can make activists out of couch potatoes. The best available sites for constructing new landfill facilities are eliminated as political and legal opposition builds. Meanwhile existing landfills, which may not be located on the best available sites, are expanded to fill our needs.

In effect, the inability to site new landfills may actually have a very positive net result. It forces a search for alternative solutions that may in fact be far better for the environment. But the alternatives may require an active role in managing solid waste by recycling and composting; or they may demand better research, development and understanding like recycling, composting and incineration.

The use of the word stream to describe the flow of municipal solid waste just doesn't quite cut it. Describing solid waste production as a swelling, flooding river that is about to peak is more appropriate.

It seems quite clear now that there won't be any miracle solutions that allow us to continue conveniently tying up and tossing out our seven bags each week. Even the "environmentally correct" plastic bags have been largely exposed as a fraud (photodegradable plastics need sunlight to deteriorate and most garbage buried underground is left in the dark).

Garbage is big business. There are basically two players in the national garbage game: Browning Ferris Industries (BFI) and Waste Management Inc. The garbage truck may say Jim's Trucking but chances are it is owned by Waste Management or BFI. With increasing amounts of legislation and ever growing profit margins, aggressive managers have replaced the mom and pop management of smaller operations while keeping the name to retain consumer confidence.

ministry to the people of God as interpreted through the Lutheran confessional documents of the 16th century and as evolved through the centuries.

As for the oversupply of Lutheran ministers—far from it. The Lutheran church, like many other denominations, has a shortage of pastors. There are 875 vacancies in Evangelical Lutheran Church in American parishes with only 276 new candidates for the ministry graduating from eight ELCA seminaries this year.

So there are no surplus pastors "stacked up in makeshift warehouse space" at the seminary. In fact there are empty residence hall rooms because of the decline in enrollment.

If Mr. Hanson intended to be either humorous or critical, I wish he could have made a more intelligent argument.

Small town in the city

Dear editor,

We were once again reminded last Saturday, May 5, of the benefits of living in a neighborhood like St. Anthony Park with a fine group of local merchants and professionals. Elyse, our second grader, had a flat tire on her bicycle, and she was concerned about missing a beautiful spring Saturday of bike riding. Without Park Hardware, she would have missed a large portion of the day waiting for one of her parents to drive somewhere to get a new tube and fix the bike. Instead, she and her friend Meredith walked to the hardware with their bikes where they not only were able to purchase the new tube, but the friendly salesman installed it on the spot and they were able to ride home by 9 a.m., all for $5.11. Next time you think about heading to the mall or the discount store, remember how important our local businesses are in making this a terrific place to live.

Sincerely,

Jim, Sandy and Elyse Christenson

Seminary commentary

Dear editor,

I am not sure how to comprehend Warren Hanson's commentary on page 5, May issue. If he is trying to be funny about the church and its ministry, I am not sure what his point is. If he is taking a critical look at the church and its seminary, it still begs the question—what is his point? Basically his commentary contains several gross errors, at least in terms of information about Luther Northwestern Seminary.

Hanson states the lack of biblical precedent for women in ministry. The Lutheran ministry as we know it today does not have much biblical precedent even for men! It is a

Quest For Food

(or, If This Is Progress, I'll Eat It)

By Warren Hanson

Cavemen didn't eat meals. Not meals as we think of them anyway. In fact, it may be more accurate to say that, for our primitive forebears, life was just one long, on-going meal.

It began at dawn, when the members of the Cro-Magnon family — father Ed, mother Connie, and children Ginger and Ed, Jr. — lifted their heads from their petrified pillows and heard the first growlings of the day. Not from the wilderness outside the cave, but from the emptiness inside their stomachs. And so they staggered out into the steaming sunlight, ready to make their first selections from the marginal menu that surrounded them.

The pursuit of food was these people's primary occupation — aside from avoiding being some other creature's meal — and their entire day was devoted to scraping up enough sustenance to stay alive. It was not an easy task.

Upon first stepping out from the mouth of the cave, the first thing into Ed's own mouth might have been a few succulent leaves — something small and light to suppress his raging appetite. If he was lucky, the leaves might have a few — um, pardon me — bugs on them, providing much-needed protein and a dash of extra flavor.

Connie perhaps favored a few berries, if she could find them. And the kids liked the crunchiness of dried seeds gathered from the ground — the original snap, crackle and pop.

Finding these appetizers would often start the family on a day-long hike in pursuit of food. These morning treats were only for getting their systems started in the morning, but were hardly enough to keep them going all day long. And so they trekked on, in a constant search for more nourishment.

Next along their journey they may have found a patch of leafy greens. Supplemented with a handful of tender plant shoots, this stop provided a crisp, fresh, tasty course in their day-long meal. But it was still not nearly enough to satisfy them, so they trudged on.

Over a hill and down in a valley they possibly found a pool of water. It wasn't the fresh, clear water that we would like to imagine. It had stuff in it. Living stuff and not-so-living stuff. And it was probably green or brown and had been stewing there for who-knows-how-long. But Ed and Connie and the kids got down on their hands and knees and ladled handfuls of the ooze into their mouths with relish. Yuck!

With this disgusting soup still dripping from their chins, the clan wandered on again, still hungry. And after some time their search was rewarded with the meat course. (I'm not going to go into too much detail here. I'm sure you will understand.)

You must realize that, by this time, Mr. & Mrs. Cro-Magnon and their kids had put on a lot of miles (without putting on a lot of weight), and much of the day had passed. Now, as the sun was beginning to descend, they turned toward home, still hoping to find a few more nibbles to keep the pangs of hunger from disturbing their sleep. And their hopes were not unrewarded. In a thicket they found some sweet red berries and a fruit tree.

Illustration by Warren Hanson

Ginger and Junior were especially delighted at finding this treat and ate ravenously — double handfuls of sweet, sticky delights. Within a short time, the fruits and berries were gone, and the family, still mildly hungry despite their day's efforts, headed back to the cave.

The quest of our aboriginal ancestors for food was on my mind last Saturday night, as I found myself engaged in one of the most bizarre rituals I ever hope to endure — a Progressive Dinner.

For those of you unfamiliar with the form, a Progressive Dinner is the modern equivalent of the prehistoric family's quest for food — an endless march from one location to another in the hope of getting full, which never happens.

Typically the person with the idea for this nonsense contacts five or six couples and assigns each couple one course in a multi-course meal. The idea is that, if each couple has to prepare only one item, they can go whole-hog — creating, for instance, the most incredible tossed salad in history. Each couple gets to be host for a little while, each couple ends up with only a small mess in the kitchen, and everyone gets to enjoy a first-class meal in the company of friends over the course of an entire evening. Last Saturday night was a warm, pleasant evening, and so it was decided that we would walk from home to home — sort of a meals on wheels. And some people think that all this is fun!

Well, not me.

The first house we went to served appetizers. We were passed a tray of what looked like leaves with little brown things wrapped inside them, providing protein and a dash of extra flavor. Sound familiar? Ed and Connie would have felt right at home. I took a couple, just to be polite, but left them on my plate.

On our walk to the next house, I whispered a complaint to my wife about the appetizers. She jabbed me in the ribs with her elbow, setting off a growl in my stomach that shook the very ground over which we trudged.

The next couple served salad. I think it's hard to get creative with salad, and these people proved me right. Basically lettuce, with a few unidentifiable shoots and crunchy things for interest. But try as they might, they could not surmount the fact that salad is salad — what I call "rabbit food." In fact I called it "rabbit food" right out loud at the table, eliciting another jab to the ribs.

I had barely enough fuel to make the trek to the next stop, where we were served soup. It was sort of brownish green, with greenish brown stuff floating in it. I stared into my bowl for a long time, sure that I would be able to witness life spontaneously generate before my eyes. I was aroused from my brown study by my wife's elbow, indicating to me that it was time once again to move on. My empty stomach was beginning to convulse with hunger.

Meat! Ah, finally a course that I could sink my teeth into. Finally real food for real people. I could hardly wait! My mouth watered as our hostess placed a huge platter before us on the table. But just as I was about to help myself, she announced what the dish was. (I'm not going to go into too much detail here. Suffice it to say that we had once had this at home when I was a child. But it hadn't been a meal, it had been a pet. We called him Bunkie.) Fortunately, there were some potatoes and some parsley around the edge of the platter, so I did eat something at this stop.

Finally, we tramped toward the last home of the night. It was nearly midnight. I was nearly ready to faint. My wife told me to grow up.

We sat at the table as the host walked in from the kitchen bearing the most glorious mountain of dessert I have ever laid eyes on. Finally! Something I could eat! He held the magnificent creation hovering over the center of the table as his wife came up beside him and struck a match. All of a sudden, the wonderful dessert burst into flames! The rest of the group appeared dumbstruck, eyes wide in astonishment. But I sprang into action. Grabbing the pitcher of ice water from the buffet behind me, I quickly doused the flames, saving the night!

We walked home in silence, my wife several steps ahead of me, refusing to speak. She entered our house and went right to bed. I entered our garage and went right to McDonald's.

The Progressive Dinner. A strange ritual indeed. But one at which Ed and Connie and the kids would feel right at home.

Council yields to U of M busway

By Steve Briggs

The St. Anthony Park Community Council has okayed the first phase in the University of Minnesota's plan to link its city campuses via private bus transitway through St. Anthony Park.

Construction may begin in the fall, if plans and funds are approved soon by St. Paul and Minneapolis city governments and state/federal highway agencies.

The district council's vote on May 9 ended a 20-year bout between Park residents and University about when, where, why and how the busway would be built. The council's consent followed a two-hour town meeting in which many of the 55 residents attending voiced concerns about speed, safety, security, noise, air pollution, bridge construction, property values and landscaping along the transitway.

University planners said the 3.4 mile, $22 million project will help the Park by removing bus traffic from city streets, by adding 4,000 parking spaces in three lots outside the neighborhood and by increasing traffic safety while shortening the inter-campus commute by at least 10 minutes.

The University plan calls for two phases, due to the way federal funds are allocated. While the council recognized that, its vote to approve construction called on the University to build the entire route as one project, if possible, or to build phase two immediately after phase one.

During first phase, the busway will be built from the Mpls. campus to the intersection of Raymond Ave. at Energy Park Drive. Subsequent meetings will tackle the second phase, and the university planners promised to appear at district meetings to keep the councilors apprised of their progress.

University planners appeared to make very little progress at overcoming neighborhood skepticism. There were no dissenting council votes; however, some council members and residents are wary of the plans' hanging questions about the second phase. The questions include:

- When will construction start on the second half? University planners say it could begin in early 1991, if plans are approved.

- Will there be enough funding to complete both phases? That remains to be seen, because some bridge funds were denied during the state legislative session. One of two bridges may be deleted from the plan.

- Will a bridge be built over Raymond Ave.? Or, will the buses leave the private busway before Raymond Ave. and travel part of the route on Energy Park Drive? If bridge funding is restored, University planners say, the bridge can be built. Without those funds, the idea of a fully separate busway will be replaced by a plan that puts buses on Energy Park Drive east of Raymond for part of the trip.

- Will the proposed bus turnaround at Bailey Hall on the St. Paul campus change the size or aesthetics of the tree-lined mall? Neighbors are skeptical, but the University insists there will be "no significant encroachment onto the mall."

- Will the Minnesota State Fair Board agree to siting the busway on its property and to opening its lot to University parking? State Fair parking negotiations have traditionally been arranged on a year-by-year basis, but the University is attempting to negotiate a multi-year parking contract that would also allow the busway to locate on State Fair property. In return, the fair would have access to the busway and its parking lots during the Minnesota State Fair.

Despite the uncertainties, the council approved the plan so that federal funds could be allocated. If not spent soon, the monies called "interstate substitution funds" would be lost, the planners warned. They added that if approval is delayed or denied at the city, state or federal level this spring, the entire project could be scrapped.

The Busway Route

The proposed busway route runs parallel to the railroad tracks from the Minneapolis campus at 4th Street, just west of Oak St., to Westgate Industrial Park at the Minneapolis/St. Paul city limits. From there the route bisects the industrial park and rejoins the rail corridor under Hwy. 280 and travels eastward to Raymond Ave.

Phase two would cross Raymond Ave. on a new bridge just south of the present railroad bridge, continue easterly along the railroad tracks and then turn north, crossing the tracks on a second new bridge. The busway will cross Como Ave. at street grade, at a controlled crossing, and travel north on Minnesota State Fair-ground property to a state fair lot, then turn west and culminate at a turnaround near the commons.

The plan calls for a 24-foot roadway and 28-foot width from curb to curb, located inside a 90-foot-wide corridor with landscaping. In some places the corridor narrows to 60 feet due to lack of access to a wider corridor. Landscaping will be more extensive than the usual construction project, University planners stated, and the landscaping costs are already included in the price.

While Light Rail Transit (LRT) has not been ruled out, the planners said that LRT is a $1.24 billion dollar project that won't occur for perhaps ten years, if at all. However, the route and roadbed were planned with wide, sweeping turns to accommodate LRT if and when it becomes viable for inter-campus transportation.

Three parking lots will be added, including 800 spaces at the former Snitzer property near Westgate Industrial Park; about 1,600 at the western terminus near the Minneapolis campus and 1,600 on the state fairgrounds.

Speed will be a maximum of 45 mph, and security will be provided by the University's

Busway to 16

Con Overgard winners

The Con Overgard Awards are presented each year by the Association in memory of a former member, Mr. Con Overgard, who lost his life after falling off a ladder when working as a parent volunteer at the St. Paul Open School. Mr. Overgard and his wife Elaine had a strong interest in education while raising their four children.

These awards are given to two 8th grade students at Murray Junior High School, one for excellence in social studies and the other for excellence in English. Winners are selected by the faculty in these two departments. This year's choices are Tiffany Bell and Kristin Ulstad.

Tiffany Bell received the award in social studies, where she does A work. She gets A's in all of her subjects: advanced science, advanced math, physical education, Challenge English, and band, where she plays the clarinet. Math is her favorite. She scores in the 99th percentile in standardized tests. She attended Galtier Math & Science Elementary School and plans to go to Central High next year. She sings with the choir at Pilgrim Baptist Church and recently traveled with the choir to Chicago.

Tiffany was the only Murray student to return on a Friday evening to demonstrate the Edunetics computer program to a group from a science fraternity. Her teachers say she is "very capable student in all areas. Her work is done neatly and on time. She treats her classmates and teachers with respect and is well-liked by her peers. She is a top-notch student and carries herself tall and proud." You may have seen Tiffany on the Channel 4 news in a recent series on Parent Power. She lives in the North End area; parents are George and Joyce Bell.

Kristin Ulstad was the winner in English. She is also an A student in all of her classes: advanced math, advanced science, Challenge social studies, German and band, where she plays the flute and piccolo. In April, she entered her science project on "Acid Deposition" in the State Science Fair at Moorhead. She won a purple ribbon, was judged as originator of one of the best 8th grade projects, and won a gold medal. She was also selected by the Bell Museum of Natural History to be one of two Minnesota students to participate in the JASON project, a 3-day, all-expense-paid trip to work with Dr. Robert Ballard, the honored oceanographer who discovered the Titanic in the Atlantic. Kristin, too, was a recent TV star, appearing on Channel 11 and on a cable station at the museum.

Kristin also scores in the 99th percentile in national tests. She attended James J. Hill Elementary and plans to go to Central next year. Her parents are Bjorn & Karen Ulstad. She lives in the West Como neighborhood. Kristin is on the gymnastics team at Central and enjoys swimming. She won a certificate for finishing in the top 10% at the State Math Fair in Duluth, where the Murray team took first place.

Her teachers say, "Kristin has specific strengths in math, reading and language arts. She draws from a wide background of knowledge and offers much insight to classroom discussions. She's super—probably one of the finest students we've had at Murray."

This year, we honor five former members of our Association who have died during the past year. We honor these members by donating money to the St. Anthony Park Branch Library to purchase books in the memory of the deceased.

These books are selected to reflect the interests of those being honored:
Lowell Satre
Victor Fadden
James R. Christianson
Frank Kaufert
Jean Lambert.

How to pay for college (and live to tell about it!)

Financing your child's college education could be the second-largest expense you'll ever have. The good news is, according to a recent Money magazine survey, college graduates earn about $25,000 more over the course of their career than people with a high-school diploma. A college education, then, is a great investment.

How to pay

The bad news is, great investments cost money. Using its Student Need Advisor ProgramSM (SNAP), a multipurpose computer software program, First Bank can estimate college costs far into the future, then recommend savings and investment programs to meet those costs. What's more, if your child is entering college within the next two years, SNAP can analyze your family's finances to determine your child's eligibility for a Stafford Student Loan or Pell Grant.

The financial-aid labyrinth

Determining your child's eligibility for a Stafford Loan or Pell Grant ahead of time is critical, because you're expected to pay the rest.

Briefly, here's how the financial-aid process works:

Step 1: Complete a Family Financial Statement. This quantifies your income and cash savings, real estate and investment equity, current and next year's taxes, household expenses, family size and number of children in college. This information is used to calculate the contribution you will be expected to make toward your child's education.

Step 2: Determine your need. Your contribution then is compared to the cost of attending your child's college of choice. The difference between your contribution and the cost is your financial need. Financial aid officers can opt to award scholarships, grants, work study or direct aid. Any remaining need then can be met by certifying your child for a Stafford Student Loan.

Financing your contribution

The process may sound simple, but there's a hitch. Just because the government says you can afford to make a certain contribution doesn't mean you have the money available.

Again, that's where First Bank can help. A representative of First Bank's Education Funding Programs Division can explain various options for financing your contribution. Some of these include:

* Savings accounts, certificates of deposit, annuities and mutual funds.
* PLUS loans. These are non-need-based loans taken out by parents to finance their contribution.

Typically, repayment doesn't begin until after graduation or when your child leaves school.

* SLS loans. Similar to PLUS loans, these are non-need-based loans taken out by independent undergraduates and graduate students to fund their contribution.

With careful — and early! — financial planning and a thorough knowledge of the financial-aid process, you can acquire the funds your child will need to get a good education.

Thanks to you, First Bank and the Olympic Festival recruited more than 10,000 volunteers in record time! We appreciate your spirit and look forward to seeing you at U.S. Olympic Festival '90, July 6-15.

Congratulations to Jessica Soler, a third grader, on winning honorable mention at the Minnesota Forestry Fair.

The 7th & 8th graders attended an assembly at Central High School on the importance of law in their daily lives. The kindergartners attended a musical puppet presentation, "Jack and the Beanstalk," at the Howard Conn Fine Arts Center in Minneapolis, while grades 1 & 2 attended the Minneapolis Planetarium.

Our German teacher, Angela Fairbrother, has been selected as one of four finalists for the "Educator of the Year" award sponsored by the Rotary Club.

Murray Junior High

On June 4, students at Murray will participate in special field trips. Eighth graders will go to Valley Fair for the day, while seventh graders may go bowling or roller-skating. Final exams will be on the last two days of school, June 6 and 7.

Murray wishes the best of luck to Mrs. Audrey Anderson who is retiring. She has been a reading and study skills teacher at Murray since 1981.

Murray's facilitator, Mrs. Carol Strahan, will be on sabbatical next year to earn a degree in elementary counseling at the University of Wisconsin at River Falls. She has been at Murray for nine years, so we will miss her, for she plans to work in a grade school after the completion of her degree.

The principal, Mr. John McManus, will end his career in education this June, retiring from the position he has held at Murray for six years. He will be sorely missed, for he has worked hard to make Murray the excellent Science/Math Magnet that it is.

Daniel Larson

Science and math teachers at Murray received an award on May 18 from the K-12 committee of the Minnesota High Technology Council.

Cathy Wick, Murray math teacher, is one of three from Minnesota to be nominated for a Presidential Award for Excellence in Mathematics Teaching.

Yasmin Lucas-Rivera, an assistant principal at Murray Junior High for the past three years, was awarded one of twenty-eight fellowships in the Bush Principals' Program.

Como High School

Gail Brinkmeyer is a new member of the National Forensic League. She gained her membership by earning 25 points for competing in speech and debate activities.

The citywide honors night for the top ten seniors of each high school was held May 24.

Josh Larson received an award for participating in Boys

State. He has also had four years of perfect attendance. Dave Davis won the Encyclopedia Britannica Salute to Excellence Award, and was named a Commended Scholar by the National Merit Corp. He was also recognized as a member of the Rotary Club Youth Leadership Conference. Heather Nielsen was recognized for her participation in the Minnesota House of Representative Student Page Program. Marianne Hanlon was recognized as a National Merit Scholar finalist.

Graduation will be June 7, 8 p.m., at the Civic Center.

Ramsey Junior High

Kerstin Beyer recently won second place in recitation in Level 1 of the state high school level German competition. Her prize was for a recitation, "The Short Life of Sophie Scholl."

Beyer and another Park resident, Nunia Mafi, were named to the National Honor Society.

Murray student wins trip

By Mary Mergenthal

Kristin Ulstad from Como Park, a Murray Junior High eighth grader, recently won a specialty award at the State Science Fair—and what a special award it was. She and a boy from Champlin, Minn., were the only two students from the state selected to travel to Hamilton, Ontario, to serve as guest researchers on the JASON project, exploring Lake Ontario with Dr. Robert Ballard in search of two sunken 1812 warships.

Kristin's winning project was a presentation on "The Effect of the Prevailing Winds on Acid Deposition in the Twin Cities Metro Area." She compared the acidity of snow in up-wind and down-wind areas of the metro area. After collecting about 360 total samples of snow from farflung areas, Kristin tested each sample in a pH meter and recorded the results.

Like other students at the Moorhead competition, Kristin had to explain her project to many judges. She figures that between this year's competition and last year's she has had about 50 judges quizzing her on her understanding of science.

In Ontario, the students, joined by six more from Florida, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Hamilton, got to see Niagara Falls ("One of the best parts of the trip," according to Kristin). Then they got to work as scientists.

"We took the tugboat Twolan to different stations," she said, "and sat in the control room as the TV beamed messages back from underwater by fiberoptic cable."

They had dinner with Ballard, the oceanographer in charge of this project. He is the man who uncovered the mysteries of the sunken Titanic.

"It was good to see science people in action," Kristin said. "I don't think I'll end up doing underwater research though. I'm more interested in studying environmental issues."

Quality Tool from 1

The eight month strike has rubbed nerves raw. "Strikers have vandalized neighboring businesses, have threatened workers who crossed the picket line, and have followed up those threats with harrasing, destructive, and life-threatening actions. They have threatened our lives, broken windows in our building and painted graffiti on outside walls, mutilated a cat on our doorstep, broken picnic tables which were outside for workers' use," says Cole.

"The National Labor Relations Board has twice filed charges against the union for misconduct. The union filed against the company, and lost."

A mass picket was planned by the union in early April. It was this event which drew widespread attention. Members from some other unions came to show support of Quality Tool strikers. Numbers of protesters were not huge. "They worked for months," says Cole, "and expected 500-600 people... they got about 50."

Cole says that at the beginning of the strike, she and her family and others worked day and night to keep the company producing the metal parts for which it is noted. Quality Tool supplies, among many others, the 17 divisions of UNISYS worldwide and won a supplier-excellence award from that company.

"We slept here and worked day and night," Cole recalls. "The strikers wrote to all of our customers but our customers insisted that they'd 'hang in' with us."

Cole and Roe are accused, by strikers, of being unfair to Hmong employees. The business owners, on the other hand, insist that it was the union that was unfair. They point out that the union local provided no interpreter for the Hmong workers during contract negotiations and that the Hmong never fully understood what it meant to strike.

"We get calls on a regular basis from Hmong who want to come back to work," Cole says. She and her family were close to those workers, were eager to see them treated well, offered them any training needed, and were more than pleased with their work ethic. They've watched union workers turn on fellow members, who happened to be Hmong. "They were brothers one day, enemies the next," she says.

"Now we have permanent replacements—brave, tough, courageous, skilled employees—and more customers. We have a full shop again, with 50 skilled workers. We're alive and well."

the library. On the library lawn, over 100 exhibitors (at last count) will display and sell their wares. Tartan-kilted pipers will parade between 10 & 11 a.m. Hostesses wearing flower garden hats will distribute programs showing locations of all artists. Warren Gore, president of the Library Association, and long-time director of the set-up and take-down crew, will doff his straw boater to the crowd during the day.

Several demonstrations of arts and crafts are also scheduled. New Bugle area exhibitors this year are: Harry Forsberg (wooden clocks, cider press, animated toys); Sue Miao (Chinese knotting); Vince Schroder (redwood/cedar furniture); Barbara & Anna Burk, Trygve Hansen (crafts made by kids); Lilith Grant (drawings, pastels, watercolors); Karen Fillmore Nave (children's clothing); and Denise Tennen (clay sculpture & pottery).

New items are faces carved in pine knots, metal sculpture, hand-made baskets, wheat weaving, needlewoven necklaces, teetertotter kids, Bauernmalerie, quilts, woven hats, muslin bunnies, etc.

1990 Art Fair Committee members are Jane Donaho, Madeline Johnson, Susan McIntyre, Janet Quale (coordinator), Joan Dow Styve, and Arlene West. Money raised will enable the Fair's sponsor, the St. Anthony Park Library Association, to pay for various Branch Library needs, design and purchase a bronze historic marker for the building, and contribute $500 to help the Friends of the St. Paul Public Library replace the St. Paul bookmobile.

On Sunday, June 3, from 2-4 p.m., a new event will complete the festive weekend. Sponsored by the St. Anthony Park Arts Forum, it's the University Ave. Studio Arts Tour. Holy Childhood Schola performs area premiere

The area premiere of "Messe Solennelle de la Pentecote" by Emile Paladilhe, will be presented at the 10:30 a.m. Mass on Pentecost Sunday, June 3, at the Church of the Holy Childhood, Midway Parkway and Pascal. Instrumental accompaniment and other choral and instrumental works in the French style will be part of the event.

It is a celebration in honor of the 80th birthday of the Rev. John Buchanan, the retired founding pastor of the church. Over 40 years ago he established a European style choir school within the curriculum of Holy Childhood elementary school and a music tradition that has preserved and presented the works of a great body of sacred music art from past ages to the present.

Plans were already under way for this celebration when it was realized that June 3 is the anniversary of the birth of the French composer Paladilhe in 1844, so it is a double birthday celebration. It is most certainly also a national premiere of the Paladilhe Mass, since very little is known of the composer outside of France and his music is out of print.

The combined choirs of the boys and girls Schola, the men's Schola and the women's choir form the Schola singing for the Mass. Bruce Larsen will conduct. Robert Vickery, director of the women's choir, and concert organist and pianist, is organist. The solo quartet includes soprano Cynthia Lohman (Mpls.), mezzo-soprano Joan Lindusky (South St. Paul), tenor Stephen Schmall (Falcon Heights), and baritone Lawrence Weller (Minneapolis).

Stephen Schmall, director of the boys and girls Schola (teacher in the Holy Childhood choir school) is a former member of the boy choir at Holy Childhood, and Metropolitan Opera Audition award winner four times.

Solid waste from 4

As landfills continue to close, local governments turn to multimedia approaches. Multimedia approaches to solid waste management combine a succession of options to reach the goal of producing the least amount of non-reuseable materials. Options include source reduction, recycling, composting, refuse derived fuel, incineration and landfilling.

Source reduction is a new name for an old process. Ask anyone who lived through the Great Depression or World War II and they will explain the concept in very tangible terms. The basic concept is that you use only what you need and find another creative and appropriate use for what you don't need—you do not throw it away.

Recycling is now a household word. But one that may not be well understood. Technically what you do at home when you separate newspaper, glass and metal is source separation. This technicality isn't splitting hairs, but splitting the concept. Recycling means returning the material to an original condition so that it can be used again.

This concept has been made painfully clear to recyclers in Minneapolis/St. Paul and Seattle. Source separators took their task to heart and the glutted newsprint market failed. As a result much of what was separated, "recycled," was landfilled anyway. The point is that unless there is a viable market for the materials being separated recycling isn't complete.

Source reduction is a new name for an old process. Ask anyone who lived through the Great Depression or World War II and they will explain the concept in very tangible terms.

Markets for recyclable materials are at the top of the agendas of state and local governments throughout the U.S. As cities initiate curb-side recycling programs, what to do with the collected materials becomes an ever growing concern. The most promising mechanism for creating markets for recycled materials is through content legislation. States and municipalities by legislation are requiring that certain percentages of their purchases are of recycled materials or materials that are recyclable.

Recycled glass and metal markets are relatively stable. The recycled paper market is less so; the recycled plastics market is just emerging. And yes, the technology even exists to recycle magazine stock (glossy paper). But as in any business, the distance you are from your market may determine whether you make money or lose money (the process and markets for recycled glossy paper are not available locally so do not include glossy paper in your recycling).

As a consumer you also play an active role in creating and sustaining markets for recycled materials. There are a variety of recycled consumer products available. And there are certainly products that come in packaging that enable source reduction or recycling far more readily than others.

Composting presents a similar problem in markets for the final product. But landfilling yard waste makes even less financial and practical sense. Once in a landfill, the light, air and water necessary for composting are relatively nonexistent and for the most part the material just sits there suffocating for many years. Composting both reduces the volume of yard waste and results in a usable material.

in Newsweek magazine regarding a flap over disposable diapers made the point that landfills close because they get too full not because they get too heavy. This is also true about composting, as yard waste is the second largest segment of the solid waste stream, paper being first.

Refuse derived fuel is a pellet-type of material that is made from materials separated from the waste stream. The material is burned much like coal. These waste-to-energy alternatives, including incineration, are also dependent on the marketability of the fuel they produce. Additionally, the waste stream used to create the refuse derived fuel and fire the incinerator must provide a relatively consistent energy value.

For example, in the case of the refuse derived fuel, a garbage hauler may charge extra for wet garbage that does not provide an energy source. In the case of incineration, the size of the facility is based in part on the volume of garbage it processes.

This design size may raise some challenging issues of who owns the garbage as markets for recyclable materials develop and volume based collection pricing take hold. The garbage generator will have the double incentive of saving money by reducing the volume of garbage generated and the ability to make money on the materials separated and sold. The incinerator may be deprived of the energy value needed in the solid waste stream.

A future view of trends in solid waste management, provided by Peter Grogan, a curbside recycling consultant, includes facilities for appliance recycling, household hazardous waste collection, construction debris reclamation, more legislation and educational curriculum.

Today, the issues of solid waste are complex. It may be difficult to see the forest for the disposable paper products, but personal concern, education and awareness, peer pressure, legislation and increasing costs will all contribute in making the trees visible once again.

Vickers drafted

Arlene Vickers of Roseville has announced she will be a candidate for the Minnesota House seat in District 63A. District 63A includes Falcon Heights and Lauderdale. She will run in the Independent Republican Primary election in Sept. Vickers said her decision was in response to a petition drive that collected over 600 signatures urging her to run. She is an attorney, a former interim executive vice-president of the Suburban Area Chamber of Commerce, and a former research attorney for the Minnesota House. She lists four key issues in her campaign: education, crime & drugs, affordable health care and the environment. District 63A is currently represented by DFLer Mary Jo McGuire.

Busway from 6

own police force or metro police, depending on studies and negotiations underway between the departments.
 About 300 bus trips per day will be made. A topographical map study of the St. Paul campus mall is under way now, and planners assured the audience that "the integrity of the mall will not be compromised in any way" by the development of a bus turnaround.

Planners added that the University has shown good faith toward completing the entire project, since it has acquired nearly all the privately-owned land that it needs to build the second phase of the busway.
 Some audience members asked, "Why not build the St. Paul phase first?" Planners responded that the Minneapolis campus suffers the worst traffic and parking problems. The University hopes to have one parking lot ready for use by the U.S. Olympic Festival in early July.

Hooke teaches gentle exercise

By Laura Ballman

If aerobic classes are rockets to fitness, then Anne Hooke's classes are the kites to health. She specializes in a type of fitness called Swedish Exercise, with an emphasis on people 35 and older.

Because of her students' average age, the classes are not aimed at the typical "aerobicizer." This is the key to her popularity. Since 1976, Hooke, who lives in Lauderdale, has been teaching up to 12 classes a week at Fairview Community Center in Roseville. Instead of chasing after the quintessential 1990s neon-decked jock, Hooke finds real people. These may be people who have never participated in a sport beyond Sunday afternoon strolls through Como Park. Many of the women in particular grew up in an era when females were not encouraged to participate in sports. Hooke literally taught one student how to skip. Then it becomes as much an emotional experience as physical.

Most aerobic classes begin with the cardiovascular workout, followed by strengthening exercises.

Hooke reverses this. She finds that by getting the dreaded calisthenics out of the way, the class members forget their tiredness. They are left with more energy, so the drop-out rate is rather low. Ninety percent of Hooke's students complete each eight-week session. In the fitness industry, this is high.

"I am very radical [in my approach] to this whole business of teaching exercise," says Hooke. "We know people [in our society] have a problem with body image and loneliness; we are numbed out." In an essay expounding on this theory, Hooke writes, "Like so much of our culture, even an aerobics class is often a lonely place. All the pews face forward with the slim bodied goddess in her elevated spot up front. She's plugged in so you can't talk (or joke) with her. And your neighbors? Well, you never have been introduced. So you are left to judge and be judged. Who is coordinated; who is trim (not fat); who has spent the most on the outfit." While some might find this description of the usual aerobic class a bit harsh, its truth speaks when witnessing the opposite.

Swedish Exercise provides the foothold for a much more gentle atmosphere. Like other aerobic and calisthenic classes, Swedish Exercise is based on free standing movements. It evolved in the early 1900s when northern European public schools began mandatory exercise classes, of military background. While soldiers need a strict regimen, Swedish civilians did not. In response, a flexible, natural moving fitness method sprang up.

None of the movements are jarring. It might be compared to low impact aerobics. Just as many calories are burned per hour, with less stress on the joints. Even the calisthenics are incorporated in a more relaxing way. For instance, a calf stretch is done leaning against the wall instead of putting a lot of pressure on the knee. Instead of structured counting, muscles tighten to the music, at each person's own pace.

The idea of moving at one's own pace is essential to the feeling in Hooke's program. When Hooke leaps into a moving circle, some students jog, some walk, some run. Anything goes. She also varies the music, using it in "surprising" places. A jig.

A waltz. A Broadway show tune. No Madonna. Like the music, the workout clothes are an eclectic bag of oldies. The nearest a leotard gets to this bunch is in the form of a matched shirt. The whole converted cafeteria is filled with different clothes, ages and body types.

These differences in attitude do relax the class. Students (and teacher) laugh and chat throughout the hour. A grandpa skips next to a grandma. One can suddenly see him sixty years ago, hopping home from school. By being interactive and spontaneous, Swedish Exercise lets anyone feel free. Joyous.

Unfortunately for the neighborhood, this is Anne Hooke's last year teaching. She is moving on to help organize a national YMCA senior fitness program. A little too close, perhaps, to neon lycra style, Hooke is also considering Swedish Exercise videos.
