Busway's first phase to be completed soon

By Kathy Malchow

Construction of the University of Minnesota busway is rolling along through St. Anthony Park.

Phase I, from the Minneapolis campus to Raymond Ave./Energy Park Drive should be completed by Nov. 15, according to Harvey Turner, Assistant Director of Planning at the University. He spoke at a St. Anthony Park Community Council Town Meeting on Sept. 11, updating the community on the status of the busway prior to the council's taking a vote to approve Phase II, which will extend from Raymond Ave./Energy Park Drive to the St. Paul Campus. (Following his presentation, the council did vote to approve Phase II.)

The busway is a new road between the campuses, built for use of the University's Medicine Lake Lines inter-campus bus service that has run on city streets for many years. Police cars and bicycles are the only other vehicles to be allowed on the busway, Turner said.

There will not be a bike lane, as such, he said, but "with only one bus in each direction every eight minutes, I feel bikers would be much safer than they are on city streets." A concern for bikers, however, is security. Will they feel safe on such a lightly-traveled road? "This is something we are looking into," Turner said.

Even though Phase I will be finished in November, the University will not run buses on it until the landscaping is completed (plantings as a buffer to nearby residents in South St. Anthony) and the commitment to Phase II is secured. These conditions were reached following months and even years of discussions

Job Corps and neighbors working together

By Kristin Copa

Better feelings are emerging between people at the Hubert Humphrey Job Corps Center and neighbors in the area.

Part of the credit for increased cooperation goes to the work of Mike Ryan. He is now beginning his second year as director of the center, where young people learn job skills and responsibility.

Ryan, a 14-year Job Corps veteran, came to the St. Paul site after serving in centers around the country. He was most recently deputy director at a center in Westover, Mass.

"My sense is he's very sensitive to the neighborhood and its concerns," Keri Poeppe, District 10 community organizer said. "He looks for ways the neighborhood and Job Corps can work together."

The district council and the center are currently working together with the MTC to extend the bus route that many of the center's students use to make a stop closer to the center.

The most popular stop for students now is at Pascal and Arlington, which is four blocks from the center. Center public relations representative Tom Stoltz said the new proposed stop would be at Arlington and Arona, right by the center.

Poeppe said the feeling in the neighborhood is mixed, but residents who live around the current stop want it moved because they are concerned about students "hanging around."

Stoltz thinks the new stop would be more convenient for both groups. "If I were a neighbor, I would be aggravated," he said. As many as 20-30 students can be at the bus stop at any given time, Stoltz added, and about 150 trek to and from the stop every day. He said some of the students pose no problem, but groups sometimes get loud.

Council Comments

St. Paul City Charter amendments should be considered — but rejected

By Jim Pfau
 St. Anthony Park
 Community Council member

City charter amendments have a bad habit of being approved or defeated by apathy. They are proposed by obscure bodies called charter commissions, and they deal with intricacies of government about which most of us have little real knowledge, much less sufficient experience to form an opinion.

This November's ballot in St. Paul includes two proposals for amending the city charter. One amendment would designate city council membership as a part-time job, cutting council members' salaries by roughly one-third and reducing the size of members' staffs.

The other amendment would change the composition of the city council. The present council is composed of seven members, all elected from geographic districts. The amendment would reduce the number of district representatives to five, and would add four at-large members.

The St. Anthony Park Community Council believes that both of these amendments would reduce the city's responsiveness to our neighborhood's needs, and accordingly has voted to oppose the amendments.

For better or worse, St. Paul's city council members do not spend most of their time legislating—that is, debating and voting on issues in council and committee meetings. Much time is spent listening to constituents, both one-on-one and in neighborhood meetings. While it can be cynically viewed as electioneering, that direct contact with constituents is the essential research that a council member conducts. But it demands a substantial time commitment. In the past two years, I have seen or talked to city council members at almost every hour of the day and evening, and have even encountered them in the office on government holidays.

If the St. Paul city council goes part-time, the citizens of St. Paul will suffer. They will suffer from the difficulty of reaching members who must split their time between two jobs. They will suffer because members will have less time to visit neighborhoods and learn about their problems first-hand. They will suffer from the increased role of city managers who, while competent and caring, do not answer directly to voters.

Reducing the number of council members elected by district in order to add four at-large seats poses many of the same risks as the part-time council proposal. Because the district would have only five districts, instead of the present seven, each council member must represent a larger constituency.

A council member representing 40% more people will have less time to devote to any given constituent—a problem that would only be aggravated, of course, if that member were part-time.

Although charter amendments may appear arcane, the proposed charter amendments could fundamentally alter the relationship between St. Paul city council members and their constituents. Opponents of the amendments, including the St. Anthony Park Community Council, believe that will be a change for the worse. The greatest disservice, though, will occur if these amendments are approved—or rejected—solely out of ignorance.

Residents to get recycling bin

Funds have become available through a grant from the Metropolitan Council with matching funding from Ramsey County to provide one recycling container per household of up to four units. ## Town meeting Nov. 6 to discuss zoning changes at University/Raymond & Energy Pk. Drive/Raymond Raymond Ave. and University Ave. zoning changes have been recommended by a Small Area Plan Task Force which has been meeting since July, 1990. The proposed changes will be discussed at a Town Meeting on Wed., Nov. 6 at 7 p.m. in the South St. Anthony Park Recreation Center, 890 Cromwell.

Several long-range goals and developed a community vision for the area:

1. Create a more identifiable office/retail node, while gradually phasing out incompatible industrial uses;
2. Encourage a smoother transition of land uses on the block north of University and west of

Raymond to create a better buffer between the commercial/industrial area to the south and east and the South St. Anthony residential area that begins on the north side of Territorial Road;

3. Retain and enhance the area's warehouse district character;
4. Improve the area's attractiveness and friendliness to pedestrians by making streetscape improvements and encouraging attractive design and landscaping of buildings and parking lots;
5. Promote and support the development of an arts district and encourage the redevelopment and reuse of buildings for arts activities where appropriate; and
6. Preserve and build on the character of the area's historic structures.

The task force has recommended zoning changes to make zoning more consistent with current land use.

Zoning changes have also been recommended for the Raymond Ave./Energy Park Drive area and will be discussed on this page next month. Questions about the study and its recommendations can be directed to Donna Drummond, PED, 228-3365.

The plan will be forwarded to the Land Use Committee of the Planning Commission after it is approved by the St. Anthony Park Community Council.

Soviet coach joins St. Anthony Park Gymnastics Club

By Linda Johnson

The St. Anthony Park Gymnastics Club started its 1991-92 classes on Sept. 9.

Open to anyone interested in gymnastics, the club holds classes for kids of all ages, from 2 1/2-year-olds to teenagers. Walk-ins are welcome at the sessions at St. Anthony Park Elementary School gymnasium, 2180 Knapp St., Mon.-Thurs. from 4-8 p.m.

Since the goal of these classes is primarily "to make kids excited about gymnastics," anyone can start or stop classes whenever he or she pleases, according to Julie Prokop, director. Each class operates month-by-month on a year-round basis, and skill levels range from preschool, to beginner to U.S.G.F. level 7, the top compulsory gymnastic level.

Generally those aged 5 or 6 and above with no experience are placed in the beginner class, but tests are held every 6 weeks for advancement into the next level. At level 5, kids can begin to work in teams. Nevertheless, at all levels kids have personalized attention and practice all events. Women's events stress grace, flexibility and strength on bar, beam, floor and vault, while men's events emphasize strength on high bar, floor, vault, rings, pommel horse and parallel bars.

"We have a lot of kids with a lot of talent at St. Anthony Park gym," says Prokop, and at the Woodbury gym "we have four 1996 Olympic hopefuls."

Prokop considers this gymnastics club program unique in the Midwest. Now part of Bergk's Academy after a management change this summer, the gymnastics club offers better, Olympic-caliber coaches and training.

The Olympic caliber is primarily due to new Russian coach, Nikolai Miligulo, who arrived in June. Miligulo was a silver medalist in all-around gymnastics in the 1960 Olympics. He coached women's 1980 Olympic teams in Russia, teams that included medalists Nellie Kim and Olga Corbut.

"Nicolai is honored master of the sport and honored master coach in Russia, the highest gymnastics awards in Russia," states Prokop. "The Midwest has no other Olympic-level training. You would have to go to Texas."

On a work visa for three years, Miligulo "chose our club because he wanted to be with a club where he could make a difference."

From Minsk, Russia, Miligulo is in this country on an extended basis for the first time, but "knows English fairly well and speaks gymnastics wonderfully," according to Prokop. He works at all three of the club's gyms in St. Anthony Park, St. Paul Park and Woodbury and "teaches mostly team kids (levels 5 and above) on Saturday at St. Anthony Park," she says.

He also holds clinics for coaches and trains the other coaches in the gymnastics club.

New church for Corpus Christi

By Ann Bulger

Official groundbreaking ceremonies for a new church for Corpus Christi parish will take place on Sun., Oct. 6, in conjunction with the annual Fall Festival. An outdoor Mass is planned for 10:30 a.m. at the site on Fairview and County Road B in Roseville, followed by the groundbreaking.

The original Corpus Christi Catholic Church was built on Cleveland and Buford in St. Anthony Park in 1940. The First Mass there was celebrated on Christmas Day in 1940, and the church was officially dedicated by Archbishop John Gregory Murray on Oct. 12, 1941, almost 50 years to the day before the start of this new church.

In 1959, the Roseville property was purchased for a school. The parish school operated for 30 years, until it closed in 1989. The Waldorf School has now opened a branch of its worldwide schools in the building, under a ten-year lease from Corpus Christi.

The new worship space will be built in the northwest corner of the school, inside the L-shaped wing of the building. It will seat 500 parishioners. Architect is Ed Kodet of Minneapolis and contractor is Langer Construction.

The present church has been sold to the Korean Catholic Community of St. Andrew Kim. The facility has been shared for three years, with the Koreans as tenants. Now the Corpus Christi parishioners are the tenants, and they have a lease to continue worship there until Sept., 1992.

The Festival on Oct. 6, 11:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m., includes a dinner, games for young and old, and door prizes. The community is invited.

Commentary

Although visiting Siberia is not easy, our writer discovered, the countryside is rugged and remote, beautiful and primitive.

Diary of a trip to Siberia

By Joel Schurke

The following account chronicles a ten-day adventure travel trip I helped lead through Chuckotka, Siberia. I helped lead this trip on behalf of my brother Paul who with his wife, Susan, runs Wintergreen, an adventure travel and outdoor clothing business in Ely, Minn. Paul led the 1988 Bering Bridge Expedition that was instrumental in melting the "ice curtain" between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. I was proud to be one of the first Americans to follow in my brother's steps across the "bridge" he helped build.

I returned to the U.S. one week before the August 19 coup. As a witness to life in the Soviet Union under the haltingly slow reform measures of perestroika I only hope that the new waves of reform continue with great speed and success.

Friday, June 28

My brother Paul called and jokingly suggested that I lead a rafting trip in Siberia on his behalf. His wife Susan was expecting a child soon, so he couldn't go. The trip had been organized by Wintergreen Arctic Adventure Travel and the American Lung Association. The tickets to Nome, Alaska were ordered and I signed up for a four-week crash course in Russian at the International Institute.

Wednesday, July 31: Nome, Alaska

Last of the Wild West. Nome perches on the edge of the Bering Sea on a flat, green expanse leading toward picturesque snow-capped mountains. This scenic spot was once a large gold rush town. Nome is famous for the gold nuggets that once littered the beach. There is still abundant "gold" here but today more in the form of the scenic countryside and abundant wildlife.

The local visitors' bureau provides the curious traveler with bunches of fact sheets on life in this rugged outpost. The high cost of living is clearly stated in a fact sheet titled Local Grocery Prices: milk, $5.39/gal.; ice cream, $4.09 per 1/2 gal.

I told the group to make use of the bathrooms at the air charter, as one of their first cultural shocks would be using the public toilets in Siberia.

Thursday, August 1: Provideniya, Chuckotka

The one-hour flight over the Bering Sea built our excitement about traveling to the Soviet Far East. As we approached the airport I began to see that my brother's warning was true. He said there is nothing with which to compare the physical conditions of this part of the Soviet Union, but it most closely resembled a bombed-out city. This was an understatement. The wheels of the airplane hitting the rubble runway made that clear.

Gas costs about 10 cents per gallon, but no one can afford a car.

As we stepped from the plane onto Siberian soil we were "greeted" by the local customs officer in a Red Army uniform who instructed us to head immediately to the lobby area where we were to wait. Hollywood casting agents couldn't have done a better job. Paul had warned me of the stiff, formal front that these men in drab green uniforms would portray, but despite their stern faces some were anxious to speak English.

Once through customs we met Yuriy Scorobogatov and Alex Ponomarev. Yuriy and Alex were duly impressed by our tongue-twisted attempt at the two-line greeting in Russian that I had taught the group. Our first meal included borscht and hamburgers.

Alex and I headed into Provideniya to exchange money at the bank while the group waited at the airport for our bus. Alex's friend drove us into town in a jeep, one of about ten or so privately-owned vehicles that we saw in this town of 6,000. Gas costs about 10 cents per gallon, but no one can afford a car. Those who could would not be able to purchase one anyway, as none exist in this region.

At the bank we exchanged $600 for 16,740 rubles. The official exchange rate is 27.9 rubles to $1 U.S. The teller carefully calculated the exchange on an abacus. When the teller finished her work on the abacus she produced a calculator and checked her math.

Traveling Soviet Far East style means bouncing down very rugged roads in vehicles designed for these conditions. There are no paved roads crossing the permafrost. The "buses" are large all-terrain machines with three foot clearances and bench seats. We headed to New Chaplino, a native Eskimo village about two hours away, to watch a dance by the village cultural group.

The dance was performed in a simple cultural hall decorated with photographs of previous visitors and Soviet movie stars. At one end of the long narrow room was an elevated stage. Six men holding walrus skin drums sat on the stage and in Russian explained the origins of their dancing. They began to sing in Eskimo and beat their drums, as girls, boys, women and men performed graceful dance movements in nearly stationary positions using their heads, hands and arms. Many of the dances reflect Eskimo traditions and offer respect and reverence to the animals on which their existence has depended.

On the walls of the cultural center are photographs of Paul and members of his Bering Bridge Expedition. The Eskimo villagers are able to travel freely between Chuckotka and Alaska as a result of a treaty signed as part of the Bering Bridge Expedition in 1988.

Friday, August 2: New Chaplino, Chuckotka

Today we were supposed to fly by helicopter to Egivkinot but were told that either the helicopter was fighting tundra fires or was delivering fruits and vegetables to other villages. As an interim activity we headed out to scale the gravel mountains that shelter this coastal village.

The original village of Chaplino was located on the unprotected coastline of the Bering Sea. The location was a prime spot for sea mammal hunting as it was on a promontory where the sea mammals passed in their migration. The Soviets forcibly moved the village to its current protected harbor about 60 years ago on the premise that they were protecting the Eskimos from having their village repeatedly fall into the sea.

The Eskimos said that this was nonsense and that the Soviets wanted the spot for military purposes. Since the installation of the radar equipment at the original location the Eskimos maintain that there are several species of birds that have disappeared from the area.

The Eskimos have had to adapt to the Soviet way of life. The wood and stucco buildings and even the arrangement of the buildings into the parallel streets are in sharp contrast to Eskimo tradition. They now augment their Soviet-supplied diets with a few dried salmon, some walrus and an occasional whale where before their entire culture revolved around harvesting sea mammals.

The Eskimos did compromise with the Soviets to sustain many of their cultural traditions. They were allowed to continue their singing and dancing after they added a few lines to the text of their songs praising the Communist Party.

... "the government pretends to pay us—we pretend to work."

Yuriy, tired of hoping for the arrival of the helicopter, arranged for the local bus to bring us back to Provideniya. We hustled on board with all of our gear in tow. On the way we passed the remains of missile installations. The outlines of the military buildings and missile fields are marked only by the remains of stone foundations and a few pieces of rusting military hardware. Alex and Yuriy are accustomed to the ubiquitous presence of military personnel and hardware.

In Provideniya we were housed in the dormitory of the local technical school. The walls throughout the building were freshly-painted with a solvent-based paint. The fumes were powerful and the rooms bleak. This building, like most others in Provideniya, is made of prefabricated concrete. We slept on the floor with the windows open.

Saturday, August 3: Provideniya, Chukotka

This was our second full day of waiting for transportation to Egivkinot. The group grew restless at each new proposition from Yuriy and Alex, wondering when we would be able to leave.

Waiting is something of a national pastime in the Soviet Union. The people seem conditioned to waiting and wait very passively. Alex explained how ingrained waiting has become in the Soviet lifestyle. He told me that it is very difficult to convince people that it would be better to work at a business opportunity and make enough money in one hour to buy what the government now provides for free by waiting for eight hours. According to Alex, people would choose to wait. Time has little value. The Soviets have a saying—"the government pretends to pay us—we pretend to work."

Because of the difficulty in communications and the lack of a distribution system that works, doing business in this part of the Soviet Union requires a long-range vision with an ample dose of patience. To place long distance phone calls we walked to the post office and bought time on the phone system. Once we placed our order for a phone call we sat and waited for the operator to announce that our call was placed. Then we entered a phone booth and screamed into the receiver.

The stores that we visited were well-stocked by comparison to other regions of the country. Grocery stores offered dried and canned goods, bread and some meat and eggs. There were no fresh vegetables, fruits or cheese. Sugar, coffee, chocolate, vodka and many other items were rationed. Some of these supplies are obtained through communist block countries like Cuba and North Vietnam.

As an incentive to lure people to Siberia, the government keeps the stores well-stocked and provides wages that are three times the national average. Wages here average about 750 rubles ($30 U.S.) per month. Many of the services for which Americans pay are provided, or are supposed to be, without cost or are heavily subsidized. I spent an hour explaining the concept of insurance to a bus driver who had never heard of such an arrangement.

The basic economic ideas of a capitalistic system are foreign to these Soviets. Even placing different prices for different sizes of the same items was foreign. A carving large or small was a carving. If one of us offered 100 rubles for a whale bone carving then all the carvings were 100 rubles irrespective of size or detail.

This region of the country produces very little. Alex says there is only consumption, no production. There is a tin mine about 200 km north on the Arctic Ocean. Reindeer herding cooperatives supply meat for exporting to other regions of the country, reindeer antlers to Korea for use as an aphrodisiac, and artisans who carve ivory, whale bone and reindeer antlers.

Sunday, August 4: Egivkinot, Chukotka

We made the three-hour flight to Egivkinot by cargo helicopter. The rugged rubble expanse over which we fly seems endless. The vastness of this country is difficult to comprehend. Alex pointed out that the distance from Provideniya to Moscow is three times the distance from Provideniya to Minneapolis. The Soviet maps cast a new perspective on my world view. Off to the right side of the map are small sections of Alaska and the western states. They appear to look like Hawaii does on maps of the United States.

The two days of waiting were over but the group seemed anxious about Yuriy's inability to find alternative means of transportation. No one said it out loud but some were wondering what would happen if we had to be evacuated. Would a helicopter or plane be available to take us back to Provedeniya on time for our return flight to Nome?

...the distance from Provideniya to Moscow is three times the distance from Provideniya to Minneapolis.

We landed in Egivkinot and were welcomed by the host families. I stayed in Yuriy's home with his wife Larissa and daughter Alla. Alla turned on their color television set and danced to Soviet-style MTV. By virtue of electronic media Alex said that many Soviets believe most Americans do little but dance and have parties.

For Alex the years of indoctrination he experienced in school are difficult to forget. A mythical character dubbed "Poor Little Johnny" was presented to Soviet schoolchildren as the typical youth in America—an impoverished, ill-educated child who had little to look forward to. Alex's first visit to the United States a few years ago shocked him as he said he realized that it was really more like "Poor Little Alex."

The social unrest in the Soviet Union and Gorbachev's reform efforts were often the topics of conversation. Many people were anxious for change. Others were anxious to return to the former system which they could at least count on for their minimum needs. There seems to be a nearly mythical belief that these reform efforts need to emulate the United States.

As a group we shocked Alex and Yuriy with the contrast of our opinions and experiences. They were keenly interested in hearing the group candidly discuss America's problems with crime, poverty, inadequate medical care and increasingly expensive college education. For them it seemed a relief to hear that Americans also had many difficult problems to contend with and a lack of agreement on how to solve them.

As the pilots searched the horizon for our river guide, we had our noses pressed to the porthole windows of our Aeroflot cargo helicopter. That arctic tundra is beautiful. Vast reaches of untouched wilderness. As we stepped onto the dry rocky river bed, the pilot, with propeller spinning, instructed us to unload the luggage immediately below the helicopter and to pile on top of the luggage. With only the slightest hesitation we did so and the helicopter lifted off directly above us. As we collected our composure, Alex and Yuriy told us that the guide was not here and was probably stuck upstream as the water levels had been steadily decreasing.

In spite of the lack of a guide, radio contact with the village of Amguema or the fresh reindeer meat that the guide was to bring, the group remained calm and set camp. There was nothing that could be done at this point as we were dependent on our skills and supplies.

The weather was perfect. High 60s to 70s on most days with bright sunshine and some clouds. The setting reminded me of Montana. Immense blue skies with nothing to obstruct the horizon except the distant mountains. The Amguema River is crystal clear, extremely cold and swift and at times very deep. Fish were abundant. Those of us who fished provided the only fresh food we were to have for the next four days.

Larissa and Tanya, an interpreter, cooked the meals.

Bread and eggs for breakfast and kasha for lunch, fish for dinner. They prepared a Russian specialty, ookha, fishhead soup.

I made the mistake of cleaning the fish too carefully and removed the heads and had to wade out into the cold water to retrieve the most important ingredient of ookha. The sight of the fishhead floating to the top of your cup took time to adjust to, but ookha was a delicious break from the monotony of kasha—a coarse type of cream of wheat. Our menu was completed with an ample supply of tea, coffee and vodka.

Amguema River, somewhere else closer to civilization.

The Chukotkan peninsula is bordered by the Arctic Ocean, the Bering Sea and the Pacific Ocean. The changes in temperature and weather conditions can be dramatically swift and severe. We experienced only a few hours of extreme conditions. Late in the afternoon the wind began to build and soon there were whitecaps coming upstream pounding the rafts. We struggled toward shore and set camp on the rock banks. These galeforce winds reminded us just how vulnerable we were in this shelterless terrain.

change raft personnel. With Russian as a screen for preventing any arguments about the new raft assignments, Alex, Yuriy and I conferred on who would best work together. As Yuriy made the announcement there was an inaudible sigh of relief.

Late in the afternoon we came upon our guide—Igor. Igor smiled as he told us that we were now 60km from Amguema, the point where we were supposed to have met him. Igor had waited here for three days. He had brought the reindeer meat but it had spoiled.

Igor set up his radio. He attached a wire to the tip of his telescoping fishing rod for an antenna and stood it up in his these things were intentional but it seemed unlikely that coincidence could account for the problems encountered with nearly every transportation arrangement. They realized that one catastrophe would spell the end of their business and they began laying contingency plans for our flight back to Provideniya and a final party in Provideniya that would have each of us smiling as we boarded the plane home.

Amguema River, closer yet.

We set out early on this tranquil day as Yuriy was anxious to make time after experiencing the winds the night before. The river broke into a series of rivulets and in our efforts to catch all the fish we lost sight of the other raft. By early afternoon we hadn't found the other raft. Each choice of stream took on greater significance. After noon we stopped for a stretch and climbed a nearby bluff in hopes of sighting the other raft. As we unloaded we saw it just ahead with lunch well under way.

The tension between some members of the group was beginning to build. The different approaches and ability to handle the challenges of this trip clashed. I arranged for Yuriy to boat. He radioed Amguema and arranged for a truck to pick us up in two days. We were going to make it to paddle hard and long to make it to the pickup point.

As I told the group the latest "proposition," dejection set in. Everyone wondered whether we would make it back to Provideniya for our flight out.

The latest news depressed Alex and Yuriy. They were trying the hardest to make everything a positive experience for each participant in their fledgling tourist business. They said they were repeatedly sabotaged by others jealous of their new success who wanted a piece of the action or more money for their services. This translated into helicopters that just didn't show up or that intentionally dropped the group in the wrong location. Alex and Yuriy were not sure if first reindeer. The Chuckchi Indians in this region have developed their culture around the reindeer. We saw tracks of brown bear, numerous in the region.

Ancient rock bluffs broke the flat river shore terrain as we approached our final campsite. We set camp at the base of a tundra plateau above. We discovered mounds of reindeer antlers that Igor proposed were the remains of years of ceremonial killings.

Friday, August 9: Last day on the river.

By mid-morning we were ready to depart by truck at the river's edge. We waited expectantly still believing with all hope that a truck would appear. It seemed beyond belief that a truck could possibly drive up the river, but it did.

I sighted the truck on the distant horizon. A "Pig Pen" type dust cloud streaked across the dry river beds only to disappear from sight in the river itself. When it arrived we were quick to load all the gear on this amazing vehicle and pile on top. The truck lurched forward and drove directly into the river going through four feet of water and climbing up and down the bluffs lining the river.

After two unbelievable hours of tundra-trucking, the driver stopped to tell us that we could visit a yarangi village if we could stomach another three hours. We were not about to miss this. As we sighted the village this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity mesmerized the group.

Peacefully dotting a grassy valley were six yarangis. These reindeer skin shelters are home to 30 Chukchi Indians. Of Mongolian descent, these people have Asiatic features that are distinct from the Eskimo Indians. They gave us a tour of their yarangis, amazing structures perfectly designed for their harsh climatic conditions and nomadic lifestyle.

The children were given aerobic leggings and a frisbee. Their new colorful leggings contrasted with the reindeer skins that the women were working with stone, wood and their hands. The men were away herding the reindeer.

The yarangi is an amazing tribute to Chukchi self-sufficiency. The skins are stretched over slender wood poles which are passed from generation to generation. This entire region is above the tree line so they are dependent on driftwood found along the shore in their migration.

Inside the yarangi are rooms of fur. Alex had stayed in the yarangi during winter dog sledding treks. He said that two candles and your breath would keep this fur room comfortably warm even in the most severe winter weather.

In Amguema we bid farewell to our amusement-truck driver and boarded a bus for the ride back to Egivkinot. The road on which we drove was built by prisoners of the gulag camps that made Siberia notorious. As we drove Yuriy painfully recounted this dark chapter of Soviet history.

...it felt as if we were driving on the backs of many men.

None of these camps are occupied but what remains brings a chill to the heart. To me, it felt as if we were driving on the backs of many men. Stalin ordered the creation of these camps along a wilderness route through which he wanted this road constructed. Prisoners were brought in and stationed at various points along the route and began to build the road by linking together their individual segments.

As we stood in silence at a cemetery of unmarked stone piles I recalled what Alex had said of the Russian burial tradition: it is the belief that a person does not really die until they are no longer remembered by the living. So, in Russian cemeteries there are seats and tables for families to picnic and spend time visiting their dead. Here at this gulag grave site I gave one pile of unmarked stones the arbitrary name of Ivan and took a stone in his memory. Thousands of Russians died in the camps that dot this road. The records remain state secrets, the number and names of the dead unknown.

Saturday, August 10: Egivkinot—Provideniya

We left Egivkinot and flew by cargo airplane back to Provideniya. We were exhausted and ready to return home. In Provideniya we were treated to a specially-arranged dinner and dance with a show by children from the cultural center. It was difficult to say goodbye to the people but not to the conditions. We were all ready to return home. As we passed through customs we saw for the second and last time the cold hard stares of the old and ridiculous Soviet border guard bureaucracy. We bid farewell to our new friends not knowing that the events of August 19 would probably change forever what we experienced as tourists in the Soviet Union.

Mark Twain wrote that there is nothing like traveling abroad to make one a patriot. As we walked into Fat Freddie's restaurant in Nome, the sight of the smorgasbord nearly brought tears to my eyes. We Americans have nothing, absolutely, nothing to complain about.

Busway from 1

between the neighborhood and the University.

Against the wishes of the community council, the University chose in the beginning stages of transitway planning to have the busway built in two phases. Council members had been fearful that once Phase I was completed, Phase II might never become a reality, leaving buses to run on city streets in St. Anthony Park as they always had.

This fear appears to have subsided. Turner said monetary commitments for the busway should be secured by Sept. 30 (there are federal funds involved), with construction of Phase II to begin next spring. Completion is scheduled for late 1992 or early 1993.

Residents can expect to see buses running on Phase I before next spring. When the buses reach the end of Phase I, they will simply feed off onto Raymond Ave. and follow their current route for the rest of the trip to the St. Paul Campus.

The University has also reached an agreement with the State Fair board to allow fairgoers to park in Minneapolis and ride buses on the transitway free to the State Fair. It's uncertain whether the entire busway will be finished in time to allow for this option when State Fair time rolls around in 1992.

Job Corps from 1

The District 10 council will meet soon with the Job Corps and MTC to discuss the routing possibilities.

Stoltz said renewed efforts at the center to improve relations with the community are encouraged under Ryan's leadership. The Job Corps was scheduled to help with the community cleanup in September. Students will help by serving food to volunteers and helping elderly residents clean and haul away garbage.

"Our community relations goal is more understanding through programs with more positive interaction," Stoltz said. "We're still living with a lot of myths and a lot of people are afraid and have the wrong idea about what we do."

Stoltz said the majority of the center's students do not fit the stereotype of juvenile delinquents. Less than 10 percent of the students have court records, and those who do have misdemeanor offenses.

Many of the students live at the center and take part in the residential counseling program augmented under Ryan's leadership. The program offers a positive environment in which students can learn the responsibility, hygiene and respect for others they may have missed in their own homes.

Poepppe already sees the work by the Job Corps paying off in changed attitudes in the neighborhood. "People are more positive than in the past," she said.

Besides her success as a collegiate fencer, she is the number-one nationally ranked under-20 women's épée fencer. She has represented the United States at the Junior Pan American Games and at various championship events internationally. ## ST. ANTHONY PARK

Stop sign changes

As the result of neighborhood petitions and discussions with the St. Anthony Park Community Council, Councilmember Paula Maccabee and the city's Department of Traffic Engineering, new stop signs will go in on Raymond Ave.

Neighbors will notice a four-way stop at Raymond and Carter; the stop signs at Knapp will be turned so that cars will now stop on Raymond instead of on Knapp. In addition, "no parking here to corner" signs will be installed 30 ft. from all the intersections along Raymond Ave. from Como to Dudley, as well as on the side streets feeding into Raymond.

These new traffic adjustments are meant to thwart the rate of speed of cars and buses along Raymond Ave.—one of the few straight-shot residential streets in St. Anthony Park.

Pearson retirement dinner

Friends, family and colleagues of Jack Pearson, a St. Anthony Park resident, are hosting a retirement dinner to honor the popular teacher and coach who retired in June after 34 years of teaching at Murray and Como Park High School. The dinner will be held on Wed., Oct. 23, at the St. Paul Curling Club, 470 Selby Ave. Social hour is from 5:30-7 p.m.; dinner at 7 p.m.; program, 8-9:30 p.m.

Tickets cost $15. Send checks, payable to Jack Pearson Retirement, to Betsy Dueholm, St. Paul Schools, Business and Financial Affairs, 360 Colborne, St. Paul, MN 55102. Deadline for buying tickets is Oct. 16.

Anyone who would like to share a favorite Pearson anecdote or other personal reminiscence should jot it down and send it to the ticket address. A booklet will be compiled and distributed at the dinner.

S. St. Anthony Rec Ctr.

Parents with young children may wish to participate in a new class presented by Stepping Stone Theater. "Creative Storytelling" will be held on Wednesdays, 9:30-10:30 a.m., starting Oct. 16, and continuing for six weeks. This class will give young children the opportunity to bring stories to life. Theater exercises, games, movement, and some music will be covered. The fee is $15 per family. Registrations will be accepted by phone (298-5770) or in person, Mon.-Thurs., 4-8 p.m. Deadline for registration is Oct. 10.

The Parent-Child Playgroup continues to meet on Wednesdays, 9:30 a.m.-noon. Bring some toys to share and meet with neighbors and future schoolmates.

The next Booster Club meeting is Mon., Oct. 7, at 7 p.m. An additional $1,000 grant from the St. Paul Youth Development Fund has been approved for expenditure on indoor climbing equipment for the Infant/Toddler Playgroup and for youth equipment at the Rec Center. Discussion at the meeting will include plans for an additional grant application to the Youth Development Fund. Call John Mulhern, 646-6986, for more information. New members and visitors are always welcome.

After School Gym Games will be held on Mondays, 4:30-5:30 p.m. Youth, ages 6-11, may enjoy playing gym games directed by recreation leader, Steve. Games may include floor hockey, whiffle ball, dodgeball and many others.

For more information on any of the items listed, call South St. Anthony, 890 Cromwell, at 298-5770, Monday through Friday, 4-9 p.m.

Green & Grindal speak

Dr. Patrick Green, senior minister at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ, will be part of the panel at a morning of theological conversation called "Authority and Ministry: Reformed and Lutheran Views," on Oct. 14 at House of Hope Presbyterian Church.

Another local theologian, Dr. Gracia Grindal, associate professor of pastoral theology and ministry at Luther Northwestern Seminary, will also be part of the panel.

We receive a great deal of satisfaction in being part of realizing that dream.

The real estate profession is a constantly changing one. We have a greater need to be better educated in a variety of fields. Today's professional is trained in financing, construction, marketing, interior decorating and law. All of these facets make real estate very exciting, challenging and rewarding. Of course, we can't forget the weekend and night work that too is part of the career, but the flip side is structuring your own work day and setting your own goals and production.

Proposed charter changes debated

By Jane McClure

Months of debate will end Nov. 5 when St. Paul voters consider proposed changes to the city charter.

Charter amendments affecting the makeup of the city council have been a focus of concern throughout the city's neighborhoods. While some community activists believe the charter changes will create a more diverse and accountable city council, others fear that the changes will mean less representation for minorities and low-income neighborhoods.

All involved agree on this: any change to the city's charter will have an impact on who is elected to the city council in years to come. That in turn will affect how neighborhoods are represented, and what the response to problems will be.

The proposed charter changes call for:

- Making the city council a part-time, rather than full-time, legislative body. Part-time council members would receive a $30,000 salary, plus benefits.

Currently, city council members serve on a full-time basis. They are compensated with a $42,500 salary plus benefits.

- Creating five ward and four at-large council seats. At-large council members would be elected on a citywide ballot.

The city council now has seven members, with one representing each of the city's wards.

The proposed changes, which have been discussed by several of the city's district councils, were to be the focus of a meeting of district council members, community organizers, politicians and charter commission members on Sept. 26. (That meeting was held after the Bugle went to press.)

Current and former Merriam Park Community Council members organized the meeting. Although the meeting began as an effort to lobby against the proposed changes, it has evolved into an information session, said former Merriam Park Community Council member Duffy Pearce.

Those behind the meeting hope that it serves as a springboard for further discussion, as well as a means of disseminating information on both sides of the charter change issue, Pearce said. One idea explored was that of having Continental Cablevision videotape the Sept. 26 session for cablecasts prior to the election.

"I worry that the issue is just being portrayed as a cost savings to the average voter," she noted.

Jim Pfau, a member of the St. Anthony Park Community Council, questions whether the charter amendments will draw the attention of St. Paul voters. "A key point with charter amendments is that they tend to get lost," he said.

The fact that the charter changes will be on the same ballot as the controversial human rights ordinance may further detract from the charter amendments, added Pfau. (See Pfau's full commentary in the ad on page 2 of this issue.)

Three community councils—Merriam Park, St. Anthony Park and the West Seventh/Ford Road Federation—have taken positions opposing the charter changes. That in itself has generated controversy. At least one district council contends that taking such a stance is inappropriate.

The Macalester-Groveland Community Council's executive committee voted not to take a position, stating that it is "inappropriate" for district councils to do so. They also question whether taking such a position would violate the council's nonprofit tax status.

Instead, council members will consider holding an informational meeting in October to explain the charter changes, said District 14 Community Organizer Kathie Tarnowski.

Drafting of the charter amendments, which took place at city charter commission and committee meetings last summer, drew several community activists. Their testimony and comments, as well as discussion among charter commission members, indicate a wide range of opinions on what the proposed charter changes will mean.

Those for the part-time council contend it will force the council to concentrate on its legislative and policy-making roles, not on day-to-day city business. They also claim that the ability to serve on a part-time basis will encourage more people to seek council seats, as they won't have to give up jobs and business interests if elected.

Yet another argument stated at last summer's meetings was that a part-time council might be forced to hold more night meetings, which in turn are more easily attended by the public.

The council currently meets twice a week during the daytime. Council committee meetings are also held during the day.

But a part-time council is seen as less effective and less responsive to citizen and community concerns, opponents of the proposal say.

Then there is the issue of council makeup. A council with citywide as well as neighborhood seats is seen by its proponents as being less parochial and able to take more of a citywide view on issues.

Those against the change say that reducing the number of neighborhood seats will only take needed representation away from minorities and low-income neighborhoods. If at-large seats go to those with the financial resources to run for office, it is also predicted that the potential exists for special interest groups to dominate city elections and the council itself.

Charter Commission members themselves disagreed on how the council should be restructured. While some favored a proposal to have seven ward and two at-large city council members, the five-ward, four at-large proposal won out on a 7-5 vote in August. Two commission members abstained.

Since that vote, how the amendments should be worded on the Nov. 5 ballot was debated at length last month by the city council. That in turn raised charges of conflict of interest on the council's part.

Of the current council members, six oppose the part-time council proposal. Only Bob Long, who represents Highland Park and part of Macalester-Groveland, supports the proposal.

"Applemania" at Seal Hi-Rise

Minnesota's apple abundance was celebrated Sept. 12 at Seal Hi-Rise in St. Anthony Park.

An apple tree highlighted the community room, which was decorated by residents and Estelle Czech, coordinator for the event. Centerpieces were arranged by Jennifer Czech.

There was an apple dessert cooking contest for which residents prepared their favorite apple recipe. Judges were from the H.B. Fuller Company: Mary Clapp, Dan Lee, Liz Johnson and Gary Olson. H.B. Fuller is Seal Hi-Rise's corporate sponsor.

Winner of the contest was Emily Bacon for her Apple-Orange Cake.

Music in Park begins season with Minnesota Orchestra principal clarinet

By Linda Steen

Forget the notion that autumn comes to St. Anthony Park when the leaves turn color. Autumn is here when the United Church of Christ opens its doors to another season of the Music in the Park Series, now celebrating its 13th year. Burt Hara, principal clarinet with the Minnesota Orchestra, makes his Twin Cities recital debut in the opening concert, Oct. 20, at 4 p.m. in the church, 2129 Commonwealth Ave. James Howsmon will accompany him at the piano.

In describing his upcoming program, Hara uses words such as "accessible," "fun" and "virtuosic." Virtuoso applies to the Hillandale Waltzes by Victor Babin, who borrows an original theme by Hummel as the basis for this composition. "I use these pieces in my teaching—now I'll have an opportunity to perform them," says Hara. Brahms' Sonata No. 1 in f minor along with Premiere Rhapsody by Debussy, Leonard Bernstein's Clarinet Sonata, op. 1, and Time Pieces by Robert Muczynski complete the program. "I wanted to include a piece by Bernstein in recognition of his recent passing away. Time Pieces were premiered in 1984 and they're jazzy but tonal. Debussy gets in for a little French diversity."

While this will be Burt Hara's first solo recital in the Twin Cities, it is not his first appearance in this music series. He played here last February when he joined soprano Dinah Bryant and pianist Daniel Blumenthal in Schubert's The Shepherd on the Rock.

Hara joined the Minnesota Orchestra as principal clarinet in the fall of 1987. A native of Los Angeles, he made his solo debut with the Los Angeles Philharmonic at the age of 14 while a student of Yehuda Gilad and Mitchell Lurie. After one year at Northwestern University, Hara completed his Bachelor of Music degree at the Curtis Institute of Music, studying with Donald Montanaro of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Upon graduation he joined the Alabama Symphony as principal clarinet, a position he held for three seasons before moving to the Twin Cities.

Hara is a regular participant in the Pensacola Chamber Festival. He has also participated in the Colorado Philharmonic and the Music Academy of the West summer festivals. He is currently on the faculty at the University of Minnesota, and has also taught at the University of Alabama and the Grand Teton Orchestral Training Seminar. In April, Hara will be featured with the Minnesota Orchestra performing the clarinet concerto of Carl Nielsen.

A newcomer to the Twin Cities, pianist James Howsmon has collaborated with a number of musicians in over 500 recitals throughout his career. Mr. Howsmon was educated at the Eastman School of Music where he studied chamber music with the Cleveland Quartet and Lieder interpretation with the late Jan DeGaetani. He has also studied with Samuel Sanders and Charles Reiner. He is a member of the Milwaukee-based Stradivari Trio and was formerly Artist-in-Residence at the Pennsylvania Governor's School for the Arts. In addition to his performing, Howsmon is also administrative director of The Quartet Program, an intensive summertime string quartet training course in Norton, Mass. This past summer he was a participant in the Golden Music Festival in Lisbon, Portugal.

Tickets for this concert and the entire series may be purchased at The Bibelot Shop (646-5651) and Micawber's Bookstore (646-5506). Season tickets (6 concerts) are $45; singles, $10 ($9 in advance) and $5 for student rush. More information about this concert or others in the series may be received by calling 644-4234 or by writing to Music in the Park Series, 1333 Chelmsford St., St. Paul, MN 55108.

Post-concert reception

Oct. 20 concertgoers are invited to join Music in the Park Series board members, performers and friends for the annual post-concert buffet supper at the Muffuletta Restaurant. Cost is $10 per person. Mail check, payable to Music in the Park Series to 1333 Chelmsford St., St. Paul, MN 55108. Reservations are limited; please respond by Oct. 15. For more information, call 644-0745.

Family concerts coming to library

The New International Trio will open the 1991-92 Music in the Park Family Concerts on Fri., Nov. 22, at the St. Anthony Park Library, Como at Carter Avenues. Twin Cities musicians Barbara Weiss, Dick Hensold and Bun Loeung, a native of Cambodia, formed the trio in 1986. They perform folk, jazz, Cambodian and early music using a variety of instruments including the harpsichord, recorder, clarinet, pipes, as well as traditional Cambodian folk instruments.

Because family concerts proved so popular in last year's inaugural season, two performances will be given, one at 6:15 p.m. (for families with young children), and another at 7:30 p.m.

Other concerts in the series include: Song Celebration:

Brian Kent and Marsha Hunter in "Teach Your Children Well, Songs Every Kid Should Know," on Fri., Feb. 28, 6:15 and 7:30 p.m.; and Creative Theatre Unlimited, date to be announced.

A special family concert with pianist Sanda Schuldmann, cellist Harry Clark, narrator Georgette Lobbé Pfannkuch and flutist Julia Bogorad, features "The Story of Babar," on Sat., April 11, 4 p.m., at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ.

Tickets for the family concerts will be available at The Bibelot Shop and Micawber's Bookstore in late October. For information, call 644-4234 or write: Music in the Park Series, 1333 Chelmsford St., St. Paul, MN 55108.

Burgess honored by seminary

By Amy Causton

Many of us dream of traveling to exotic lands, but for most of us, it remains a dream. For the Reverend Andrew Burgess, it became a career.

Burgess's long life of missionary and education work is being honored by Luther Northwestern Theological Seminary with an annual lectureship in global missions. The lectureship was inaugurated Sept. 16-17 by Kenneth Cragg, specialist in Islamic/Christian relationships.

Burgess was born August 3, 1897, in Herscher, Ill., near the first Norwegian settlement in America. He grew up in a family of "spiritually-minded people" who attended church regularly and had daily devotions. One day some missionaries came and spoke at his church. "I said to myself, 'I'd like to be a missionary too,'" says Burgess. "I felt that that would be a way of serving God."

He came to Minnesota to attend St. Olaf College, where he earned his bachelor of arts degree in 1919. (St. Olaf has named Burgess one of its Distinguished Alumni.) He then taught for two years at the American School in Kikungshan, Honan, China, before returning to Minnesota to go to seminary.

Burgess began attending Luther Seminary in 1921, and he has lived in St. Anthony Park ever since. He received his bachelor of theology degree in 1924 and eventually went on to earn a Ph.D. from Drew University in 1948.

After graduating from the seminary, Burgess wanted to return to China as a missionary and was ordained, but the country was in the midst of political struggle and closed its borders. After waiting in vain for two years for China to open up, Burgess accepted a call to go to Madagascar, an island off the southeast coast of Africa. He went there as a missionary in 1926, married his wife Constance (another missionary), and stayed for six years.

After his "tour of duty," Burgess returned to America for a furlough. He was then offered and accepted a position as a field secretary for the Norwegian Lutheran Church in America (NLCA). He continued in that job until 1947, when he accepted the position of professor of missions at Luther.

Burgess retired in 1968 after 21 years of teaching. "I felt healthy and strong," he says, "and I said, 'Why not go out and do some more work?'" He served as a replacement for missionaries on furlough, teaching at Martin Luther Seminary in Papua New Guinea, Lutheran Seminary in Mapumulo, Natal, South Africa, and Lutheran Seminary in Benagaria, India. He also lectured at Protestant Seminary in Canton, China.

In his travels, Burgess had to adapt to often difficult living conditions: extreme heat, disease, limited transportation, and food that many Americans wouldn't want to look at, much less eat. On one occasion, Burgess and his wife were presented with a gift of a chicken. "They said, 'We'll cook it for you,'" says Burgess. "When they got it out, we found that they hadn't even cleaned it out yet, just took off its head and put it in a kettle and cooked the whole thing...the feathers were still on it." Not wanting to offend his hospitable hosts, Burgess says, "We said we weren't so very hungry, and so we took it and gave it to some other people, and they thought we were wonderful."

In addition to all his career achievements, Burgess has been married 64 years and raised five children—Joseph, Anna Marie, Constance, Andrew Jr. and Esther. He also took a trip around the world with his wife, Constance Stolee Burgess. And he has written nine books about his missionary experiences.

But Burgess is currently at work on a book that could surpass all the others: his autobiography. He expects it to be about 400 pages long when it's finished, but that, he says, "won't be for another year or two."

With such a full life to write about, that can come as no surprise.

Decisions on local issues made by St. Paul City Council

By Kristin Copa

Three issues affecting St. Anthony Park went before the St. Paul City Council on Sept. 17: approval of the second phase of the University of Minnesota busway between the St. Paul and Minneapolis campuses and approval of licenses for the bingo hall at 2424 Territorial Road in South St. Anthony and an infectious waste processing facility at 742 Vandalia Street, also in South St. Anthony.

The council passed the second phase of the busway without discussion on a consent agenda.

Bingo Hall

Approval of a bingo hall license for TransCity Investments was part of a public hearing, this time attended only by TransCity and Midway Charity Bingo representatives. Councilmember Paula Maccabee argued for an indefinite layover until questions involving parking conditions and submission of a site plan could be answered.

This suggestion was frustrating to Bert Lang, representative of TransCity Investments. He said the company had submitted several site plans for the facility.

Bob Kessler of the licensing office said the misunderstanding about the site plans was a result of "difference of interpretation" and said it would take his office a week or two to iron out the problem before the resolution would appear before the council again.

Maccabee said the layover would give the neighborhood more time to bring forward its concerns.

Some effect from neighborhood pressure is already being felt. Council President Bill Wilson said his office had received several letters expressing opposition to the bingo hall.

The council then voted in favor of a layover.

Infectious Waste Processing

Bobbi Megard, St. Anthony Park community organizer, attended the council meeting to represent the neighborhood's concerns over BFI's proposed infectious waste processing facility at 742 Vandalia. She said the plant was in no way "an asset for attracting business to the area," but "we all agree we have to take our share of the waste."

Megard said other concerns of the neighborhood were that the plant would process waste from an area extending beyond Ramsey County.

Maccabee said she had worked with the licensing office, the health department, pollution control agency and the community council to draw up a list of conditions to control the environmental impact of the site.

The plant will process medical waste from area hospitals and nursing homes. The conditions presented by Maccabee set guidelines for minimal waste storage at the plant, a maximum of two storage vehicles at one time though most of the time there should only be one. Refrigerated trucks will be used to store the waste before it is taken out of the state for disposal. The waste will be kept at temperatures below 38° to prevent odor.

The new plant is going to be "state-of-the-art," according to councilmember Goswitz. Maccabee concurred, saying that even the steam generated by the processing would be sucked back into the plant.

Further stipulations state that burning of waste should not occur and that radioactive waste is not allowed at the site.

The site will be closely monitored and its license will come up for renewal every year, at which time the health department will be called in, as it will whenever any changes in operation at the plant are made.

The BFI Medical Waste Systems representative agreed to the conditions with minor changes for clarity. He said the company had invested $1.6 million, more than it had originally budgeted, for the facility, which will be completed October 31.

The council voted unanimously to approve the facility and commended Maccabee and BFI for reaching the best possible solution for the waste generated by the growing health care industry in the Ramsey County area.

Dear Ramsey County Composting,
Thank you for all the work you have done. It's great. You are helping the world by doing this. Brian Hughes, Age 9

Local priest in ecumenical dialogue

By Linda Johnson

The Rev. Dr. Marilyn Salmon, associate priest at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church in St. Anthony Park, has been invited by the Center for Jewish-Christian Learning at the University of St. Thomas to lecture in its biennial series of ecumenical dialogues.

The lecture series will focus on understanding the various traditions within American Judaism and the variety of issues that face ecumenical dialogue.

Chosen for her scholarly work in the area of Jewish-Christian relations, Salmon will be one of three theologians engaging in interfaith dialogue on Thurs., Oct. 17, at O'Shaughnessy Educational Center Auditorium, University of St. Thomas. Dr. Salmon will present the Protestant perspective on the topic "In Our Times: What has Changed Between Christians and Jews?"

Salmon is active in church activities throughout the Twin Cities. She is an associate professor of New Testament at United Theological Seminary, where she teaches all the New Testament classes, serves on the board of the University Episcopal Center at the University of Minnesota, and does extensive public speaking in area churches. Next summer Salmon will lead seminary students to an archeological dig at the New Testament site, Bethsaida on the Sea of Galilee.

Ecumenism and theology have always played major roles in Salmon's life as far back as she can remember. "My family was active in the Lutheran Church and my parents were models of faith for me... I was always interested in God questions," she says.

Murray Junior High

The Murray school year has gotten off to a terrific start. A bunch of new teachers have come to Murray this year, and we would like to give them a warm welcome. They are: Mr. Tarr, a math teacher; Ms. Christensen, a math and science teacher; Mr. Solac, the new band teacher; Ms. Rogalski, an English teacher; Ms. Hammerlind, the new German teacher; and also Ms. Ryan, a health and phy. ed teacher. If you have not met these teachers and would like to, Murray's parent/teacher conferences are on Nov. 7 and 13, from 5:30-8:30 p.m.

After school activities have gotten under way. They include: Science Club, Math Club, French Club, and Boys and Girls soccer. Students can also participate in Student Council or Peer Mediation, a new program at Murray, where kids talk to other kids about their problems.

Carin McIntosh

The Program for Social Development, known as PSD, is on the lower level at Murray Junior High School. The PSD Recyclers are a group of students spearheading the recycling program at Murray. They collect throughout the school for curbside pickup. They will use one of the neighborhood reminder signs to help the community effort. Office paper is being collected also, since a large amount is generated at the school every day. The Pepsi Cola company has donated recycling boxes for pop cans at the school.

PSD students will sponsor their annual apple sale in October. Community residents may call in their orders for Spartan apples, handpicked by the Special Education Program students. PSD number is 293-8746. Apples will be delivered to residents' homes during the second week of October. Orders will be taken for a half-peck, a peck, or a bushel.

Como Park High School

As the 1991-92 school year began, students arrived at Como Park greeted with many new changes. Some changes include new staff. Judy Petrie has joined the English department with a strong English and drama background. Joe Paatalo is the new journalism teacher replacing Barbara Saylor. His classes publish the school newspaper and the yearbook. In the area of languages, Jane Law is an addition to the French department.

Como Park's science department is increasing in numbers every year due to the strong people in the department. This year added to the department were Steve Hawkins, who teaches biology, and Kathy Kuhn, who teaches college prep and advanced placement biology.

Budget cuts have been painful for Como Park students, staff, and parents. There was a 13% cut in supplies, 21% cut in extra-curricular activities, 33% cut in equipment and aide time has been cut for the second year in a row.

The 1991-92 student council president is Mike Tressel. The council is already off to a good start having had a goal-setting meeting attended by Mike, Mr. Jacobson (student council advisor) and other members of the board.

For the second time, the Como Park boys' tennis team has won the Regional Academic Award for having the highest grade point average. Congratulations to the team, and to Ms. Dumas, the coach.

On Sept. 15, 150 Como Park juniors and seniors attended the National College Fair in the Minneapolis Convention Center.

On Oct. 1, the Como Park athletic commission, under the leadership of Mark Cealy, is meeting to find ways to improve Como's program. With additional financial support the commission is supporting three athletic banquets this year (one each season). The first one is to be held on Nov. 11, 6:30 p.m. Several fan/family nights have been planned for fall sports. On Sept. 26 at 7 p.m. is football; Oct. 3 at 6:30 p.m. is girls' swimming and diving. Oct. 8 at 5:30 p.m. is volleyball (junior varsity and varsity), Oct. 16 at 3:30 p.m. is co-ed cross country. Boys' and girls' soccer held theirs earlier in September.

Como's Homecoming game is on Oct. 11 at 7 p.m. against Johnson at Central.

Superintendent of St. Paul Schools, Dr. Gaines, will be visiting Como on Oct. 9 with a number of district and Unisys employees to view the new computer network installed in the office area by Unisys. Several staff members will attend a lego-logo workshop on Oct. 9-10 to use robotics for demonstrations.

The school board forum, originally scheduled for Oct. 15, is now Oct. 29, 7 p.m., due to scheduling conflicts. School board candidates will be invited to answer any questions. The community is encouraged to attend.

Oct. 17 and 18 are teachers meetings and there will be no school for students. The Como Park Advisory Council will meet on Oct. 22 at 7 p.m. in the library.

Oct. 25 at 8 p.m. is the Halloween dance.

Holy Childhood School

On Thurs., Sept. 5, our parents went "Back to School!" Frau Merkel, our new German teacher who is from Germany, gave parents a lesson to demonstrate her methods. Wunderbar!

The D.A.R.E. program began on Sept. 17. This will be the third year that our 5th graders are participating in the program in Drug Abuse Resistance Education. They have this class over one semester in 17 one-hour blocks taught by Officer Matt Bostrom.

Also on Sept. 17 Officer Wicklund installed our new student patrols for the 1991-92 school year. Our safety record has been perfect and we are working to keep it that way.

Our second annual sports raffle and bake sale will be held on Sept. 28 and 29. We will have many raffle prizes and hope to raise enough money to support our girls' and boys' sports programs.

Holy Childhood School students will be holding their annual marathon walk on Wed., Oct. 2. The money raised by this walk will be used for school equipment and educational programs. All donations benefit the students and donations are tax deductible.

Chelsea Heights

We are excited to welcome a new principal at Chelsea Heights this year. He is John Ashmead and formerly was a principal for six years at Prosperity Heights Elementary School and we're delighted to have him at Chelsea.

Our students are learning about a wide variety of subjects. Different classes are studying about Native Americans, oceanography, world cultures, recycling, sow bugs and current events, to name just a few. We're all looking forward to a year filled with new knowledge and exciting challenges.

Falcon Heights Elementary School

One of the things going on at Falcon Heights School is that Mrs. Kafenberg's 3rd and 4th graders and their 1st grade buddies in Mrs. Rickard's class are planting a rainbow garden. They are planting bulbs by the kindergarten classroom. The bulbs will come up in the spring. They got the idea from a book called Planting a Rainbow by Lois Ehlert.

In Mrs. Olson's 2nd grade class, they just finished reading The Magic School Bus by Joanna Cole. Our librarian dressed up as Mrs. Frizzle and went and talked to the 2nd graders about her adventures.

Central High School

Central's year began with a bang as usual. The enrollment has increased by nearly 200 students this year. These new bodies will add to the diversity, excitement and crowded halls.

The fall season has already begun and with it all the enthusiasm of the athletes and spectators. Area participants include Ray Albrecht, Ben Bloom, Erica Breneman, Matt Crosby, Adam Erickson, Josiah Friesen, Joe Jenson, Dan Larson, Cynthia McLean, Eric Peterson and Ben Westhoff playing soccer; Will Slayton, Steve Nysse, Kent Nelsestuen, Steve Mann, Mara Magnuson, Nunia Mafi, Brian Maddock, Dan LeBarre, Dan Kohler, Ed Kohler, Tim Kersey, Mike Dennis, Jessica Beeler and Rachel Allyn running cross-country. Kerstin Beyer and Martha Namie are cross-country team managers. Jenny Blevins, Bea Foster, Mindy Hockin, Amanda Steven, Brenna Barrett and Zena Schuster are playing volleyball; Amy Lopez, Julie MacGregor, Anne Nakanishi and Kristin Ulstad are swimming. Ingrid Larson and Rebecca Ingrid are playing tennis and Brad Sperbeck is the only local football player.

Students are looking forward to Homecoming week—Sept. 30–Oct. 4. Included in the week's festivities will be dress-up days, coronation, a dance, a pep rally, and, of course, the football game against Como on Fri., Oct. 4.

St. Anthony Park can also be proud that two of the 12 seniors named National Merit semi-finalists from Central are Park residents. They are Kent Nelsestuen and Liz Kramer. (Semi-finalists are chosen based on their scores on the P.S.A.T. test.)

St. Anthony Park

School's well under way. The calendar is filling up with exciting things for October besides Halloween.

The 5th and 6th graders have started to plan for their coming trips. The 6th grade will be going to 6th Ridge Environmental Learning Center or E.L.C. in Finland, Minn. They will be up north from Oct. 7–11.

In December, the 5th grade will go to the St. Croix Environmental Learning Center near Hudson, Wis. The 5th graders are the first at our school to experience St. Croix E.L.C.

Parents might want to mark their calendars. Teacher conventions will be held on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 17–18. School will not be held during this time.

Fri., Oct. 25, 6:30–8:30 p.m., is the annual Pumpkin Fest to raise money for S.A.P.S.A. There will be pumpkins for sale and there will be a pumpkin raffle plus a contest in which parents decorate pumpkins and staff members judge.

Gaines visits Langford Park

By Michelle Christianson

On Sat., Sept. 7, new St. Paul Superintendent of Schools Curman Gaines visited Langford Park. Residents asked pointed questions about the future of St. Paul schools.

St. Anthony Park Community Council co-chairperson Melissa Coffey, St. Anthony Park School Association president Nancy Plagens, 4th ward councilmember Paula Maccabee and Rep. Alice Hausman each spoke a few words of welcome before Gaines was introduced by school board member Claudia Swanson.

Gaines, visibly pleased by the turnout, stressed the theme of turning a good school system into an excellent one by exploiting our resources of a sound financial base, community support and a great staff. His goals include greater staff achievement and an increase in the graduation rate from 85% to over 90%, based on 7th grade population.

As he fielded parent questions about accountability, delays in receiving adequate materials, class size in both the elementary and secondary schools, "white flight," inadequate communication and sibling preference, Gaines expressed a willingness to address and remedy problems in a much more expedient manner than they had been handled in the past. He is setting up a system whereby parents may easily learn where to bring their questions about school and will have solutions for their problems quickly through a central information and advocacy network. Although he didn't profess to have an answer for every problem, Gaines did certainly listen to each parent and seemed to be most open and positive in his approach to his new responsibilities.

Julia Clark

Julia K. Clark, 81, died on Sept. 9, 1991. She taught math at St. Anthony Park Elementary School for 24 years and at Macalester College. She retired in 1974.

Clark, the daughter of Russian immigrants, was born in Chisholm, Minn. and graduated from Bemidji State University. She taught in Hammond, Mich., and in a one-room schoolhouse on an Indian reservation in northern Minnesota before joining the St. Paul schools in 1950. She earned a master's degree from the University of Minnesota in 1958.

After her retirement, she joined the Peace Corps in 1975 and taught at a teacher's college in Ghana. She left the Peace Corps in 1976, when she began suffering an adverse reaction to malaria pills.

She then went to Sendai, Japan, in 1977-78, where she taught at a school for missionary children.

Clark returned to St. Paul in 1978 and promptly left again on a month-long tour of Europe.
