Format changes at Gatsby's proposed by bar's manager

By Kristin Cooper

In an effort to curb continuing violence, Gatsby's manager Renee Montpetit said she is changing the format of the bar from a dance club to a sports bar with rock and country music and a game room. She said the change of scene will send the current troublemakers to other locations.

The parking lots outside the bar, located on Como Avenue on the northwest end of St. Anthony Park, became the scene of many incidents, including shots fired at an off-duty St. Paul police officer patrolling the area in October.

The violent nature of that incident and the ongoing trouble prompted Police Chief Bill Finney to refuse to allow off-duty police to be hired as security guards. Even Montpetit said she doesn't like her bouncers to get involved outside because of the guns.

Montpetit's comments came at the January 5 Housing Committee meeting of the St. Anthony Park Community Council, the body charged with making a recommendation to the full council for further action.

The trouble at Gatsby's started when Norma Jean's, a Minneapolis bar known for violence, closed down, Montpetit said. After the closing, the patrons from that bar came to Gatsby's and "scared all my people away," according to Montpetit. It was also at that point that Montpetit started KMOJ nights—Thursday and Saturday—which are now the nights that attract the most people, including some troublemakers. "It's a small percentage that cause the trouble," Montpetit said.

A particularly violent period in November caused her business to drop $5,000 per week, she said. Discussion at the committee meeting touched upon Montpetit discontinuing the KMOJ promotion. However, Montpetit said she could not afford to because those are the nights she makes money, and she needs all the money she can get to promote the changes to the format she is proposing.

Although she said she had already ordered a new sign for the bar and was looking into games and some limited construction to make a bigger dance floor and to combine the existing sports bar and dance club, it is not clear where Montpetit will receive funding. She said she had some sources and some ideas, but she is currently in Chapter 11—allowing her to reorganize her finances under federal bankruptcy law—so borrowing would be difficult.

In addition to the construction changes and new music format, Montpetit said she developed a new menu and will offer line dancing on the expanded floor.

Montpetit expressed frustration with the committee's questions about deadlines at times. She asked the committee to be patient while she makes the changes. "I'm putting my livelihood on the line," she stressed.

Bill Marchand, center, faculty advisor for Punchinello Players, coached two actors during a 1989 rehearsal. The 80-year-old troupe will give its last performance in May.

It's curtains for Punchinello Players

By Amy Causton

A long-standing tradition is coming to an end this spring as the University of Minnesota's Punchinello Players completes its final season. The troupe, one of the oldest student theaters in the country, will give its last performance on May 14.

Now in its 80th year, the troupe is disbanding because North Hall, its campus home since 1961, is being torn down because it has become too expensive for the university to maintain. North Hall on the St. Paul campus was built in 1902 and is "coming apart at the seams," according to Punchinello Players' faculty advisor Bill Marchand.

"It's impossible to find new space for us" because of the extensive storage space needed for all the group's sets and costumes, he adds.

Before World War I, there were eight student groups at the university devoted to speech, forensics (debate) and drama. Punchinello Players is the last one remaining, so its departure is really the end of an era.

Punchinello Players was formed in 1914 under the name Agricultural Drama Club. Its first play was called Back to the Farm, and then University President Coffey's daughter performed in it.

The troupe received its unusual name in the 1920s. Punchinello is a character in the Italian Comedia del Arte of the 16th century, similar to "Punch" of "Punch and Judy."

Beginning in the 1930s, the University Theater Department started growing and began to eclipse the Punchinello Players, although their memberships were different. There were few theater majors in Punchinello Players. Most were students who wanted to be involved in theater but not make it a career. In fact, Marchand says that some theater majors have found Punchinello Players too casual. He describes the group as "very

Seal Hi-Rise residents conned

By Linda Johnson

Mildred Jordan, 83, hopes other area hi-rise residents will beware of con men wearing cop's clothing. A resident of Seal Hi-Rise in South St. Anthony Park, Jordan was fooled by a "clean-looking heavy-set black man" who "wore dark clothes" and "acted just like a cop would act."

Appearing suddenly in her doorway at noon, Dec. 27, he "took a thing out of his pocket, said it was his badge," and demanded to inspect all the valuables in her apartment. "I believed him," Jordan said. "I thought he was a detective."

He told her the police needed to inspect the apartments since a lot of valuables had been stolen by strange people. He first inspected her billfold containing $20 and "did it so slickly" that she did not even notice he had removed the money.

Then he "saw the jewelry box in the kitchen" and just as slickly stole her engagement and wedding rings worth over a thousand dollars. Upon leaving he wished her Merry Christmas, hugged her, and warned her to keep her door locked.

Jordan still did not know that anything was amiss until she asked "the lady across the hall" if "she had been inspected too." Her neighbor advised her to check her purse to see if anything was missing and call the police. Only then did Jordan learn that not only her money but the rings she had been "saving for her grandchildren" were missing.

Two other women in the apartment building had been taken in by the same con man, "an elderly lady in her 90s and another resident, who is younger," according to Jordan. "The other women didn't realize their Volunteers in the District 10 neighborhood near Como Park braved bone-chilling temperatures on Jan. 15 to collect Christmas trees for recycling. The trees were transported by trucks from BFI Waste Systems and Mickey's City Wide Service to a site on the University of Minnesota St. Paul Campus for chipping.

Boulevard trees

St. Anthony Park residents who want to speed up the process of boulevard tree planting can accomplish this through a special city cost-sharing program. City tree planting on boulevards has been done in conjunction with work on sewer separation. Neighborhood reforestation has been on hold while the planting has been done in this manner.

A tax deductible donation of $35 will support the planting of a 1 1/2-inch caliber bare root boulevard tree. A $100 donation will support the planting of a 2 1/2-inch caliber balled and burlapped boulevard tree. City funds will make up the difference.

The variety of tree will be the one specified for the block in the city's tree planting master plan, and will be planted by a contractor. All trees will be guaranteed for one year.

Further information and application forms are available at the Community Council office, 890 Cromwell Ave. Or call 292-7884 to get the details.

Special thanks to Mark Hansen

Mark has provided the major volunteer impetus on the Christmas tree pickup. His efforts included coordinating volunteers, providing a truck and a good deal of muscle power. Mark has been behind the scenes on a number of Council efforts, including flier distribution for the food pickup.

Thanks also to RED ARROW general hauling. Rick is our contact for our Neighborhood Cleanup and volunteered to participate with a truck and driver for our tree pickup. We have a lot of business good neighbors as well as residents.

EcoTeams save money as well as resources

EcoTeams consist of 6-8 households that work together for six months with a coach from Global Action Plan for the Earth. They follow a workbook that addresses: garbage, water, energy, transportation, shopping habits and empowerment.

The average household changes from EcoTeam conservation measures last year were: garbage reduction 42%, water usage reduction 25%, energy and gasoline usage reduction 16%. The average saving from these conservation measures was $401 per household.

For further information on EcoTeams call the Council office at 292-7884. Individuals can make a BIG difference!

Council-sponsored meetings are listed each month in the Bugle Community Calendar on page 13. Everyone is welcome!

Aries Precision Sheet Metal will move to Energy Park

By Lee Ann Owens

In a $1.33 million expansion project, Aries Precision Sheet Metal Co. began construction with an official ground-breaking on Dec. 22. Work on the building on Energy Park Drive at Energy Park Lane is expected to continue through April. Aries plans to move from its present St. Paul location at 764 Vandalia St. to the new 38,000-square-foot facility during May.

"We're excited. More space, that's the purpose of it—expansion," Rick Johnsen, president and owner of Aries, said.

Another reason for the move is for the location at Energy Park. "It's in the center of the metropolitan area which is an advantage for us," Johnsen said.

Aries, an industrial-based company, currently employs 37 people and may hire another 10 during its first year at the new facility. "The jobs are highly skilled," Mike Strand of the St. Paul Port Authority said.

Aries has annual sales of over $3 million. According to Johnsen, business is going well.

Aries changed its name five years ago from J.W. Grand Force. The new name has been easier for filing, falls at the beginning of the phone book and "it tells people what we do. From the old Greek dictionary, Aries means metal working,"

Johnsen said.

"We make custom sheet metal parts. They're for defense, computers, medical, security and telecommunications. Just a variety of industrial and commercial applications," Johnsen said.

The St. Paul Port Authority Board of Commissioners approved the Energy Park land sale on Nov. 23. Financing for the project is facilitated by revenue bonds authorized by the St. Paul Port Authority, according to Strand.

The 2.8-acre Energy Park location also allows room for another 15,000-square-foot future expansion beyond Aries' current construction project.

Future uncertain for Fisher Nut plant

By Michelle Christianson

"The Fisher Nut plant is scheduled to close in June." What does that sentence mean for you?

Many area residents are not aware of the plant on Wycliff Street in South St. Anthony Park, east of Raymond Avenue. Its closing won't mean that Fisher Nuts no longer are available. So why should you care if the plant closes?

Jim Mangan from the Working Group on Economic Dislocation thinks he has good answers to those questions. "The loss of 280 to 300 jobs always has a negative impact on the community as a whole. Along with the loss of spending power, there is disruption of the families, sometimes loss of homes and even sometimes an increase in crime. We should all be concerned about the social impact of such a closing."

The Working Group is an organization composed of labor, clergy and community groups working on issues of economic justice. It interacts with labor unions, management, the community and sometimes the state to find alternatives to workplace closings and job loss.

Of course, the best option for the workers is to convince the company not to close the plant, to remind it of its civic responsibility to the community. Although Fisher has had this plant since 1920, it is now finding that it would be more profitable to subcontract out the operations to other smaller companies, and an appeal to civic responsibility doesn't have much to do with the bottom line. Nonetheless, Mangan still holds this out as an alternative.

A second alternative is to convince someone else to buy the plant and continue to sell nuts under another label—either an existing or a new label. This also presents problems of breaking in to the market with a new product or convincing existing companies that they need another plant. (In smaller companies a worker buyout is sometimes feasible, but there are too many employees at Fisher for this alternative, Mangan says.)

The third alternative to complete closing is to induce some other non-related business to buy the company, install new machinery and retrain the work force. Even if the plant does close, retraining is available from the state. But will the jobs be there? It is unlikely that retraining would allow the current workers to earn wages comparable to what they are earning now.

Mangan has approached Abby Struck, community organizer of the St. Anthony Park Community Council, about bringing in community input because he feels that as many groups as possible should come together to solve problems such as plant closings. The council is concerned about land use and empty buildings as well as retaining jobs in the community. A feasibility study should be completed by March.

Happy to be here

At the first meeting I attended as new editor of the Bugle, someone playfully suggested that the neighborhoods served by the newspaper are so terrific I should consider moving to one of them.

I don't think my family will relocate from the St. Paul neighborhood where we've lived for 12 years. We have too many ties established there. But I was encouraged by the neighborhood pride and local boosterism shown by the person who made the suggestion. Frankly, it's one of the reasons I came to the Bugle.

In the less than two weeks I have been at the Bugle, I have been impressed with the friendliness of residents and business people, the offers for help, the quality of the staff and writers, the commitment of the Board of Directors. The Bugle plays an important role in the life of the neighborhood, it seems, and I have been trusted with editing it. It's a responsibility I won't take lightly.

For more than 10 years, I edited the District 1 News which serves the southeast neighborhoods of St. Paul. My commitment to community journalism runs deep. Neighborhood newspapers are the source of local news, features and commentary that you won't find elsewhere. They foster a small town feeling in the big city.

I firmly believe a neighborhood newspaper should be as diverse as the communities it serves. While we may not seek controversy, we won't shy away from a serious discussion of issues that affect people's lives. We invite news from churches, recreation centers, government, schools and businesses. We need features about interesting people in the neighborhood. We also need to look at crime, taxes and the "nitty-gritty" of everyday living.

If you have an opinion about issues the Bugle should explore, please call. We welcome your suggestions!

Enjoy progressive dinner!

Dear editor,

As a resident of the Park for 16 years, I have found that one of the most delightful events that takes place here (other than the garden tour) is the Progressive Dinner in February. I had heard about progressive dinners, but had never been invited to participate until the St. Anthony Park Association began the first one in the Park a few years ago. What fun! Each course an adventure in finding your way around the Park and getting to meet other Park residents and see old friends. Plus, it's a great way to enjoy some of St. Anthony Park's architecture from the inside for a change.

I encourage everyone to take advantage of this delightful event. It is open to anyone in St. Anthony Park, whether or not you are members of the St. Anthony Park Association. And, don't think you have to be a gourmet cook. You can serve beans and hot dogs for all I care. The point is to have some fun and get out of the house, enjoying good company and conversation (and eating, of course).

Hope to see you there! See the ad in this issue of the Bugle for information on how to sign up.

No medal deserved

Dear editor and Warren Hanson,

Shame on you, Warren Hanson! First for breaking the law, and I quote, "By leaving my son without a parent or guardian in a liquor-serving establishment I would be breaking the law," and then for making light of it in your commentary "Rap Trap" published in the January Bugle.

Since you teach your son that it is all right to break laws that are inconvenient for you, by your example, will you be surprised when he breaks laws that are inconvenient for him? Believe me, what you deserve is not a medal!

Paula Willie, Como Park

Hanson responds

Dear friends,

For the January 1994 issue of the Bugle, I wrote a story about being trapped against my will in a rap concert. This true story was based upon my leaving my under-age son unchaperoned in a liquor-serving establishment, a clear violation of the law. I would like to publicly apologize for making light of this violation in my story. I am not a scofflaw, and am very concerned about being a good citizen and parent and setting a good example for my children. If we are incensed when others break the laws and violate our property and security, we must then be sure that we ourselves abide by the laws, even the inconvenient ones. So, to you my friends, my neighbors, and my family, I offer my sincere apology.

Warren Hanson

Marion Gratz remembered

Dear editor,

Just couldn't pass the obituary notice in your most recent edition noting the passing, at age 97, of Marion Gratz.

I attended Murray Junior High for two years, circa 1929-30, and Miss Gratz was not only the librarian, but she was also my English teacher.

In 17 years of formal schooling one doesn't recall too many of those teachers who have attempted to pass on information and help mold mind and character. But Marion Gratz was very definitely one of those memorable teachers. A wonderful woman and a wonderful teacher.

For years she attended the annual Murray reunions in Langford Park on July 4. Then, in her 90s, she was a wonderful person to visit with and to exchange recollections of those days when Murray was a brand new school "in the Park."

Thanks for listening,
James Fish, Wayzata

Why were shootings justified?

Dear editor,

In the letters about the Oct. 12 shootings at Hampden Park Foods, most of the attention has been placed on the judgment of having an armed guard at the store. Some have raised the question of the wider community's responsibility.

My concern is that this community has shown a glaring lack of responsibility to know what actually happened and if the shootings were justified. The internal police Firearms Review Board and county grand jury have decided Officer David Timm's actions were justified.

Though we are given this conclusion we are never told why the shootings were justified. In a democracy, public servants have an obligation to inform the citizenry of the basis for decisions. Officer Timm bears immediate responsibility for the deaths of Bruce Teng Thao and Kai Lor. When Officer Timm's actions were found to be justified, very few residents of this community asked the simple question "why?"

Neither of the boys was a saint. None of us are. But they were human the same as you and me and deserve to be treated as such. I seriously doubt Bruce and Kai were killed justifiably. From my personal review of the police records for the incident, I've discovered many inconsistencies and reasons to question the justification of Officer Timm's shooting Bruce and Kai. Whether the community is responsible for the deaths of these two human beings is debatable. What the community most definitely is responsible for, and obligated to do, is to ask "why?" they died.

Let me share some of my specific questions and concerns:

1) Why did Officer Timm begin shooting? He claims to have heard what he thought was a gunshot? Of all of the survivors in the co-op he had the best view of the two boys, so why didn't he see a trigger pulled or flash from the barrel of the gun? The incontrovertible physical evidence of the recovered revolver shows that the boys never fired a shot. Only Officer Timm's weapon was discharged.

2) Why did Officer Timm shoot each boy after they were unarmed? The police order 246.00 explicitly states that "every member of the department shall, in all cases, use only the minimum amount of force consistent with the accomplishment of his mission and shall exhaust every other reasonable means of apprehension or defense before resorting to deadly force." What evidence is there of Officer Timm exhausting alternatives? I can't find any. The boy killed in the store was disarmed by Officer Timm in a struggle before Timm shot him and the boy shot in the street was also unarmed. Absolutely no attempt was made to physically restrain either boy when they were already wounded and unarmed.

3) Did Officer Timm use deadly force in a controlled and restrained way? I fail to see evidence for such a conclusion in the police files. I have reservations about Officer Timm's control over his own actions that night. In his statement Timm is unable to clearly describe how the incident transpired. He doesn't know how many times he fired his weapon. He somehow magically glides from his initial position at the end of the far aisle to the door, neglecting to mention his struggle with and shooting of one of the suspects en route to the door. Though Timm never mentions more than two suspects, when asked to identify the suspects from police photographs he selects a total of three, only one of which was involved in the robbery.

4) Why does Officer Timm apparently make inconsistent judgments about the danger to his own safety? Initially he shoots at armed suspects. Next he feels safe enough to walk up and knock the gun out of one of the boys' hands. Having disarmed him Officer Timm then shoots this boy. When he follows the other boy outside he leaves a boy and the gun behind him on the floor of the co-op. Once outside he shoots the other boy without even claiming to have seen a weapon directed towards him.

I end up asking these questions and stating these concerns not because I know conclusively what happened but because the public servants who concluded the shootings were justified have failed to articulate any kind of explanation. Hopefully others in this community will begin to realize there is a responsibility and obligation to review not only the wisdom of hiring a police guard but also the actions resulting in two deaths. A democracy where citizens fail to take the responsibility of ensuring that justice is not abused is nothing more than a facade.

Robin C. Vue-Benson,
Lauderdale

Words and Not Words

By Gregg Richardson

Slang has always been a rather dubious object of contention among the language gladiators of the op-ed pages, but recently I have detected a linguistic trend that I find vaguely unsettling: the subtle invasion of Not Words.

Slang vocabulary, for all of its sassy obscurantism, has always meant something to its speakers. The word "groovy", for example, meant—well, you know what it meant. "Grody to the max" meant—okay, well, it was after my time, but I'm relatively sure that it meant something.

Nowadays however, I am increasingly conscious of words that seem familiar to me, but apparently have no meaning: in other words, Not Words.

I have always harbored a nasty malice toward the word "like," because it seemed to me to be a silly noise with no meaning. But after reading the entry and usage note in the 10th edition of Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, I came to suspect that it does mean something, after a fashion. In the phrase "he was, like, gorgeous" for example, Webster tells us it is used "interjectionally...to emphasize a word or a phrase." We used to have words in English that could do that, except that we called them adverbs. There were lots of them with various meanings. You could say "he was heartbreakingly gorgeous" or "he was wiltingly gorgeous," or "he was dangerously gorgeous." Now, it appears, we are approaching the day in which there will be only one adverb, it will be called an interjection, and it won't mean anything at all.

Webster reports that like can also be used "with the verb to introduce a quotation, paraphrase or thought expressed by or imputed to the subject of the verb" as in the phrase "so, I'm like, give me a break." In this case, the word, identified craftily by Webster as a conjunction, takes the place of a whole string of words that a civilized speaker of English might otherwise assemble, such as "so I thought to myself, 'give me a break,'" or "after a few anguished moments of internal dialogue, I considered replying 'give me a break,' but thought the better of it."

Even Webster, however, doesn't venture to define a more insidious function of the word like:

"I was, like,—." (At this point the speaker stops suddenly and emits a vocal sound resembling a gentle fart, rolls her eyes—she is nearly always a female under twenty-five years old—and never finishes her sentence.)

Duct tape.

You know, that sticky silver fabric created for heating pipe applications and now applied indiscriminately to anything in the house that needs fixing or put together, without regard to beauty, permanence or functionality? Like has become the duct tape of American speech. In a language that once rose to the verbal equivalent of finely-crafted Chippendale furniture, we are now making tables of two by fours held together with duct tape.

We might say: "Transfixed for a moment by the breathtaking impudence of his accusation, I struggled for appropriately searing words of reply; I flushed, my breath came in hot gulps, and yet I could only gaze in speechless reproach."

Instead we say: "I was, like,—."

"Like" has become the duct tape of American speech. In a language that once rose to the verbal equivalent of finely-crafted Chippendale furniture, we are now making tables of two by fours held together with duct tape.

On the science front, the application of Not Words to Not Science has the potential to transform an entire body of knowledge. The American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) has recently introduced guidelines for new elementary and secondary science curricula based upon the approach that "less is more," according to U of M Professor Emeritus Andrew Ahlgren. (This Not a Phrase is itself one of those deliciously un-self-conscious or well-meaning locutions that has become so ubiquitous as Orwellian locutions the twenty-first century. Don't forget that war is also peace, freedom is slavery, Hardee's is real food, and Bill Clinton is a liberal.) In the mind-boggling war of mediocre ideas that defines America in the 1990s, AAAS' new approach is the appropriate obverse of the "Great Words" approach. "Great Words," in case you are not aware, is a hot educational theory from the 1980s, whereby students, in lieu of receiving a liberal education, are trained instead to recognize all the words in the appendix of the book Cultural Literacy, by E. D. Hirsch, Jr. Rather than writing exams, they simply point to words enunciated by the teacher and bare their teeth, whereupon they are rewarded with small pieces of fruit for correct responses.

In the new AAAS Not Science curriculum, on the other hand, students of the future are not required to learn any words at all, but simply the general ideas the words represent. Fifth graders, for example, were once forced to learn how to multiply and divide; ten-year-olds of the 21st century should simply know that "mathematics is the study of many patterns, including numbers and shapes and operations on them. Sometimes patterns are studied because they help to explain how the world works or how to solve practical problems."

Whereas any self-respecting boy of 50 years ago could build a working radio receiver with a lead sulfide crystal and scraps of wire and metal scavenged from the garage, the 8th grader of the future will attain the more transcendent perspective that "engineers, architects and others who engage in design and technology use scientific knowledge to solve practical problems."

The basic premise of this curriculum is, of course, that American children aren't smart enough to learn the big words used by big scientists. This may be true. It certainly is proverbial that eight-year-olds can't learn the intimidating scientific names of those scary objects of their ardent dinosaurophilia, but simply refer to them collectively as "those big old scaly things with the sharp teeth." Now perhaps they will find it easier to understand that those big old scaly things went away because a thing hit the ground and lots of stuff went up and they got cold.

Science is typically a bit slow to recognize the importance of intellectual advances arising from other disciplines (mainly because scientists haven't yet perfected a spectrometer sensitive enough to give accurate measures of paradigm shift). History teachers long ago dispensed with all those silly names and dates in favor of a cross-disciplinary conceptual approach ("sometimes people get mad and have a big fight that makes lots of noise and when it's over they get a new leader"). Politics, always on the cutting edge, long ago perfected the technique of Not Language and has even introduced a few simple technical terms into the process (almost one-third of the American public knew, for example, that the guy in the White House got a NAFTA, which means jobs, jobs, jobs, because it's the economy, stupid, but the guy with the big ears thinks it will make a giant sucking sound).

Of course it is only in the collusion of politicians and journalists that the art of Not Language reaches its apogee. I was moved to genuflect before the headline in the Star Tribune of December 8, 1993:

"U.S. Hid 204 Nuclear Tests: Disclosure is Attempt to Win Public's Trust."

It's truly awe-inspiring to observe the White House attempting, in a single boldly Reaganesque epigram, to give an entirely new meaning to the word "trust." Only a politician could think on such a rarified level, and only a newspaper editor could recognize the brilliance of conception, in order to display it with such prominence. Imagine any ordinary person attempting to use such reasoning:

"Honey, I just wanted to say that I've had 204 affairs over the past 50 years, but I'm telling you now in order to win your trust."

"Dear sirs, I'm very interested in the position you advertised for a bank teller. I've robbed over 204 banks in the the past 50 years, but I'm telling you up front, in order to win your trust."

But leave it to America's youth. Once again they have created a succinct and appropriate slang response of one word, a word that manages to sum up such linguistic haute culture:

"Duh."

YOUR PRICE MUST BE COMPETITIVE!

Buyers select by comparison shopping. Buyers look at an average of 12 homes. In the buyers' eyes, your price must be justified in comparison to other homes.

A home price at its market value has a 95% chance of being sold within a reasonable marketing period. The higher its price in relation to other similar properties currently being marketed, the less the probability of its sale. Buyers make their decisions by comparison, and homes which compare unfavorably with others, pricewise, do not sell. Also buyers often hesitate to buy homes which have had a long period of exposure to the marketplace, fearful that there is something wrong with them.

Ultimately, the selling price of your home will be set by the market, and we can serve you best by determining what that current market value is.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF OVERPRICING

If the price is too high relative to the competition, buyers won't even look at an otherwise beautiful property.

Worse yet, if the house is overpriced, some agent may bring people through it to help sell another house of equal listed price that has more amenities and value.

An overpriced property goes stale during the initial important first few weeks on the market. Then, when the price is reduced, the house is overlooked because it is not new in the marketplace or because potential buyers wonder why the price needed to be reduced.

First impressions are lasting. A house realistically priced and properly marketed from the beginning of the listing period offers the best opportunities for you the seller to obtain the top dollar in the shortest time without problems.

Price it right to begin with and get top dollar. For professional help by someone who lives in, knows and sells more in the park — call Peggy Sparr 639-6383.

money was missing either."

Jordan says that, since the incident, security measures at Seal Hi-Rise have been tightened. The police have visited her and the other women who were victimized to "show them pictures" of possible suspects. The police are also watching Seal Hi-Rise more closely, and on Jan. 11 there was a security meeting on crime prevention for residents.

Jordan does not know how such a con man could have gotten into Seal Hi-Rise, since it is a secured building. However, she notes that many strangers get in when residents open the front door. They just walk in behind the residents as the door is opened. Although Jordan was not frightened at the time the incident occurred, she says, "If I would have known [the man was not a cop and shown fright] I might have been killed!"

Although the rings were precious family treasures which Jordan intended to be "handed down for generations," she says her life is worth more and she is glad she did not know he was a thief when he was in her apartment.

She usually leaves her door open because she sometimes needs to summon help when she has difficulty breathing. The man just appeared in her apartment. "If he knocked, I didn't know." Jordan keeps her doors locked now.

Jordan notes that neighbors have been helpful. "They all gave me $5," and they advised her that if the police wanted to carry out an inspection, they give notice and arrange an appointment well in advance.

A police department spokesperson also noted that whenever it is necessary to "do an apartment survey," the police will arrange a date with the resident well in advance and make a definite appointment. Moreover, upon arrival, the police will not only show a badge but also an "I.D. picture signed by the chief on back."

Gatsby's from 1

She also said that she pays $90,000 per year in taxes and employs 40 to 50 people.

The change in format will completely change the clientele, she said, and cited the calmer period in December to show how cold weather would hold the trouble down until the changes are in place.

After some discussion, the committee recommended that the council give Montpetit the benefit of the doubt. The recommendation sets an April 1 deadline for Montpetit to make the changes to the bar or the council will request a revocation of the bar's liquor license.

Chris VanHorne, a representative of the city licensing office present at the full district council meeting on Jan. 12, said that any action asking for revocation of the bar's liquor license would have to follow due process.

VanHorne said that usually only liquor violations would lead to the revocation of a license. When asked if shooting was not considered as serious as a liquor violation, VanHorne responded that any incidents had to be well-documented and that the licensing office has had the bar under surveillance since the end of November without incident.

The district council decided to go ahead with the recommendation made by the Housing Committee, with a slight change in wording to make it clear that, although the council does not have the authority to revoke the license, it would request that the license be revoked if the changes are not made by April 1.

As the council took action, neighborhood residents still have not made their voices heard. While former St. Paul City Council Member Paula Maccabee's office received one phone call after the December article in the Park Bugle, city offices have generally not had complaints from neighborhood residents or businesses.

However, phone inquiries to businesses surrounding Gatsby's were conducted by a representative of the St. Anthony Park Community Council with varying results. Goodwill, located across the street from Gatsby's, allows Gatsby's customers to use their parking lot, and said they had no problems whatsoever with Gatsby's.

One business owner in the vicinity of Gatsby's responded to the request to come to the Housing Committee meeting. Dik Bolger, of Bolger Printing, said his business is open 24 hours and his female employees are afraid to go to their cars at night. He said some customers had expressed fears of coming to check their publication proofs after dark and the parking lot was often littered with beer cans and liquor bottles.

Punchinello from 1

With the growth of the Theater Department and the increasing difficulty for busy students to fit in extracurricular activities, the Punchinello Players started to wane.

"The only reason Punchinello Players is still active is because we're on the St. Paul campus," says Marchand. "If we were on the Minneapolis campus, we'd have died out years ago." Currently, the troupe has 10 to 12 members, and "expands and contracts depending on our needs," Marchand says.

The Punchinello Players is a completely student-run organization, currently headed by President Tanya Seebach. It also has a historian who keeps news clippings, reviews and programs to add to the Players' scrapbook.

The students decide which plays to perform, then place ads in the paper to announce auditions. Marchand says that while sometimes the director and most of the actors for a show are outside recruits, "Punchinello Players is the producing organization, the heart of the group."

Currently, Marchand estimates the group is about half students and half community members, who he says provide continuity to a group whose student membership changes every few years.

Marchand first became involved with Punchinello Players when he was in graduate studies at the university, getting his Ph.D. in theater history.

He has been faculty advisor since 1960, and in that time he estimates he's been to over 1,700 meetings. He serves as a liaison to the university in addition to directing numerous Punchinello Players productions. Marchand is also a professor of rhetoric on the university faculty.

Punchinello Players has relied mostly on the classics for its repertoire. The group's last two plays will continue this tradition.

The Players will perform William Saroyan's The Time of Your Life, which will be directed by community advisor Tom Johnson. He has been involved with the troupe for 15 years, beginning while he was a student. Performance dates are Feb. 18, 19, 25, 26 and March 3, 4 and 5 at 8 p.m. Call 624-7458 for ticket information.

The group's last play will be Our Town, directed by Marchand. Performance dates will be April 29 and 30, May 6, 7, 12, 13 and 14.

Holy Childhood

On January 6, Krista Wynn and Shelly Kroona, representing Holy Childhood School, met Mayor Norm Coleman at a news conference at Highland Park Senior High School. Mayor Coleman invited students in public and private schools in St. Paul to talk about what he is going to do as mayor. He said if St. Paul is to remain a strong and safe city, the future generations of leaders now in schools must have the very best education possible. "A quality education system is one way to assure us all that St. Paul's best days are yet to come," he said. Mayor Coleman promised to work closely with the city's schools to address the many challenges facing the city and its young people.

We began the school year in January with two new foreign students. Kai Zhou came to the United States with his parents from Nanjing, China. As a fourth grader, Kai's biggest challenge is the English language. Another student, Guanqiu Song, has been at Holy Childhood for 2 1/2 years. Guanqiu and his parents are from Beijing. Because both boys speak the same Chinese, Guanqiu often acts as interpreter.

Seonghee Khil has returned to Holy Childhood as a second grader. She attended kindergarten and most of first grade here, but returned to Korea, her homeland, during second semester. In Korea the children are on summer break now, so she came back to the U.S. to spend time with her father. Mr. Khil attends classes at the University of Minnesota.

Holy Childhood participated in Catholic Schools Week by having a special church service and pancake breakfast on Jan. 16, a rollerskating outing on Jan. 19 and open house on Jan. 18 and 20.

We have begun our annual fundraiser—selling candy bars. The profit will be used to purchase equipment. We hope our sale is a "sweet" success.

Como Park High School

The Como Park Symphonic Winds Band Ensemble is participating in the All-City Honors Band. They will play at the Ordway Theatre with other public school bands. They recently had their winter concert, and sometime in May they will hold their spring concert. The band is beautiful to hear, so plan on attending their concert!

Ms. Adams, a highly respected social studies teacher at Como Park, organizes a trip to Washington, D.C., with an organization called Close-Up. Students can spend a week in Washington, D.C., studying the government. This year, a record number of students, 31, will be in Washington from Feb. 27 to March 5. A few of the students going are: Owen Deneen, Katie Nordstrom, Emily Rohr, Jeff Stelmach, and myself, Carin McIntosh.

Sports are very important at Como. Students take a lot of pride in their sports. Here's what a few of them said:

Gymnastics captain, senior Sarah Reuter: "Como Park's gymnastics team is showing great improvement since last year with their new coach, Mrs. Iverson."

Girls' basketball captain, senior Becky Schmidt: "This has been one of the best seasons for girls' basketball."

Boys' basketball captain, senior Adam Seeley: "The Como

Park basketball team is showing great promise in what could be one of their best seasons in quite a few years."

Hockey captain, senior Andy McIntosh: "Our team, 12 seniors and 4 juniors, is traveling a hilly road right now. We are ready to start our steady ascent going into the playoffs, though."

Wrestling captain, senior Mark Ross, "Despite early season sickness and injuries, we got off to a great start. We are currently undefeated in the conference and our main goal is to win our third consecutive conference title."

I was unable to talk to the boys' swimming captain, but I understand that their season looks very promising.

So come on, all you Cougar fans, stand up and clap your hands!

Carin McIntosh

St. Anthony Park Elementary

On Jan. 14, students at St. Anthony Park Elementary School were very busy. The intermediate team (4th, 5th, 6th) went to the Ordway with Kevin Locke, a Native American hoop dancer. We also had the student council election. The winners were: Norris Anderson, president; Joyce Strand, vice president; Diana Salisbury, secretary and Jonathan Farnsworth, treasurer. The executive board includes the runners up: Berit Griffin, Ann Schoch, Laura Carlson and Micah Boyd.

Fourth graders spent a day skiing and snowshoeing at Tamarack Nature Center in White Bear Lake. Fifth graders went to Camp St. Croix, Jan. 27-29, for environmental studies. And the 6th graders went to Afton Alps for a day of skiing.

By Sheri Booms

From the coast of Hawaii to an island off Georgia, from Alaska's Inside Passage to the deserts of Arizona, Dr. Alida Storaasli has traveled to these points, and places in between, in search of knowledge. No, she does not seek the secret of life, but she has discovered one of life's secrets—that retirement isn't an end, it's a beginning.

Storaasli is an Elderhostel scholar. Her adventures in learning began in 1980 when she retired as Director of Education for a division of the American Lutheran Church. Since then, she has traversed the United States attending more than a dozen Elderhostel programs.

Four times a year the thick Elderhostel catalog arrives in Storaasli's mail. Each is filled with tantalizing opportunities. At the same time, her friends across the United States receive their copies. Soon, the work starts ringing. A friend from Alaska suggests they meet at a Mississippi Elderhostel. Another friend thinks the St. Olaf-sponsored program in Lutsen sounds good. Still another recommends a trip to Missouri.

The average Elderhostel accommodates about 50 hostellers and lasts for about a week, sometimes longer. There are usually three classes, two in the morning, one in the afternoon. But Storaasli insists they're distinctly different from formal education classes.

"No tests!" she exclaims. "But it challenges you to think. It's a chance for me to study all the interesting things I never knew about before."

Storaasli speaks highly of the instructors, all authorities on the subjects they teach. "For example, in Washington, I took a class on Broadway musicals and the instructor invited singers from the Seattle Opera company to perform for us. And the person who taught Chinese history had just returned from China three days earlier."

But wait, there's more to Elderhostels than the classes, Storaasli assures. There are also tours of the region, plus a talent night starring the hostel-ers themselves. Then there are those extras that have really added to Elderhostel experiences, like learning the hula in Hawaii, and meeting the governor of Alaska after a trip up the Inside Passage on a ferry. And at the end of the week, there's an official graduation ceremony for the hostellers.

"What I also like about Elderhostels are the people you meet. They're from all over the U.S. and represent every occupation," Storaasli states. With over 200 Elderhostels to choose from, she seldom meets the same people twice.

All this for about $300, including room and board. Elderhostel programs intentionally keep costs down to make them affordable. Nothing fancy about the meals or accommodations, Storaasli admits, but always good.

For more information, you could talk to Storaasli, but chances are she'll be in Lutsen learning about Norwegian heritage, or heading south to study Mark Twain's Missouri. Your best bet is to write to: Elderhostel, 75 Federal St., Boston, MA 02110.

Mrs. Thelander's first grade class has been studying the country of Norway to learn its customs, foods and crafts in preparation for the Winter Olympics being held there. All the first graders had a visit from Dave Dahl, Channel 5 weatherman.

When we aren't outside enjoying winter activities in January, we're inside using gymnastics equipment during gym class. Our school is the only elementary school in St. Paul that has such a complete set of gymnastics equipment, thanks to the St. Anthony Park Gymnastics Club.

The 5th and 6th graders had a joint spelling bee. The winner was Ann Schoch and the runner-up was Katherine Warde.

Kirsten Griffin

Central High School

As cold as things have been, Central's sports have been hot. The Central Nordic Ski Team has been leading the winter sports. The boys' ski team is ranked third overall in the state. The girls' ski team is ranked first overall. Some notable names from this area from the ski team are Ingrid Larson, Nunia Mafia and Mara Magnuson. Magnuson is also ranked in the top ten overall.

Also a hot item coming up is a semi-formal dance. A fun-filled week of activities will lead up to this dance, held at the St. Paul Radisson. The date for that dance is Feb. 11.

Central has a wonderful acting group called the Central Touring Theater Group. If anyone would like to see how this acting troupe is doing, you can catch them at the Limelight Theater in the Uptown area of Minneapolis.

Another boost to the campaign was a $1 million challenge grant made by Roe and Beverly Thompson Hatlen, Eden Prairie, Minn.; and Norman and Eunice Jones, Minneapolis. Additionally, Earl and Dorothy Olson, Willmar, Minn., pledged $3 million. On Jan. 14, the Campus Center was renamed the Olsson Campus Center. Earl is chairman of the board of Jennie-O Foods, Inc.

Pianist and University quintet highlight annual jazz tribute

The Music in the Park Series presents the University of Minnesota Jazz Faculty Quintet and pianist/composer Sean Turner in "For the Love of Jazz," a Valentine's Day tribute on Sun., Feb. 13, at 4 p.m., at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ, 2129 Commonwealth Ave.

This concert, the third annual memorial tribute to long-time St. Anthony Park resident and jazz enthusiast Gus Donhowe, is a veritable Twin Cities jazz artist showcase. The performance features University of Minnesota jazz faculty including Ron McCurdy, trumpet; Mark Henderson, sax; Jimmy Hamilton, piano; Tom Lewis, bass; and Phil Hey, drums. The quintet will perform a potpourri of early jazz classics highlighting music of the Harlem Renaissance era and works by Duke Ellington and his contemporaries. Making a special guest appearance will be pianist/composer Sean Turner. Turner, who will be joined by bassist Tony Axtell and drummer Jess Wheeler, will perform original modern jazz works.

Leading the University quintet is trumpeter Ron McCurdy, head of the University of Minnesota jazz department since 1990.

This debut performance marks a homecoming for featured guest Sean Turner, who grew up in the St. Anthony Park area. He will be performing in the church that he attended for many years as a child. Turner received his undergraduate degree in jazz performance. His credits include: keyboardist for recording artists, The Steeles; piano performances with The Minneapolis Gospel Sound; featured vocal soloist with the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra; and first prize winner in the Thursday Musical vocal competition.

Music in the Park Series tickets are $11 at the door, $9 advance purchase and $5 student rush. Tickets may be purchased at The Bibelot Shop (646-5651) and Micawber's Bookstore (646-5506) in St. Anthony Park. For more information, call 644-4234.
