

Octoberfest at Milton Square celebrates the joys of autumn

By Kristin Cooper

The State Fair is over. The kids have gone back to school. The leaves are beginning to change colors. All of these things are signs of fall and the coming of the eighth annual Octoberfest in Milton Square.

The celebration, also known as the Scottish Flair at Milton Square, takes place on Sat., Oct. 7, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., on Carter at Como Avenues, and across the street on the St. Anthony Park Branch Library lawn.

Mary Ann Milton, organizer of the festival and owner of the Milton Square buildings, said the festival is in thanks for the customers who shop at Milton Square and is meant to be a family affair.

"It is a wonderful time for children," she said, "and this is a children's neighborhood."

There will be many activities for children and adults at the festival, which includes costumes, storytelling, a treasure hunt, treats, face painting and dancing. Because pumpkins are scarce this year, Milton said she plans to have a paper pumpkin decorating contest for children.

Participants too old for the pumpkin decorating contest can enjoy free carriage rides, strolling musicians, a variety of food from tenants of Milton Square and a chance to meet other people in the neighborhood. Milton said the attendance depends on the weather, but hundreds of people have attended the event in the past.

The Octoberfest is just one of the events Milton takes part in during the year. She is also involved with the St. Anthony Park festival in June and features carriage rides during the holiday season.

While Milton Square has been home to some businesses such as Micawber's, Country Peddler and Muffuletta for almost 20 years, the shopping district welcomed new tenants like A Taste of Scandinavia, Sheppard Design, Gustafson Jewelers, Deb's Hair Design and Oriental Gift Shoppe plus Alterations within the past year.

Milton said the complex is attractive to businesses and was featured in a recent Minnesota Monthly article because of its charm.

Artist Hazel Stoeckeler eyes one of her watercolors, "Yucatan Jungle," which influenced the design of her famous mural in Green Hall at the University of Minnesota.

The foresight of a great artist: Hazel Thorson Stoick Stoeckeler

By David Anger

A Native American chief stands in the shadows of a sinister-looking timber baron with looming hands. The industrialist, whose surname might be Carpenter or Walker, grabs a tree trunk and contemplates his rising fortunes. Beyond him Paul Bunyan leaps forth and Scandinavian men perform remarkable labor as they sweat in the fields, on the river and in the mills. A devastating fire blazes, only to be extinguished by a railroad man.

The story is told by Hazel Thorson Stoick Stoeckeler in her immense and aptly named "The Epic of Minnesota's Great Forests." The 10-foot high and 54-foot long artwork concludes on an optimistic beat when a Minnesota man named Christopher Columbus Andrews, who helped shape the United States Forest Service, appears on the scene.

Large chunks of forests were preserved, notably the Chippewa and Superior National Forests. A school of forestry at the University of Minnesota was created. Later, during the ambitious presidency of Franklin Roosevelt, the Clark-McNary Act of 1934 advocated forest conservation. At the mural's conclusion, a concerned forest ranger peeks over the mural.

This artwork is a heroic gesture that is celebrating its 50th anniversary. To commemorate the occasion, the Larson Gallery in the St. Paul Student Center is staging an exhibition that chronicles the making of the mural through a display of Stoeckeler's preliminary pieces. These works are on loan from the Weisman Art Museum.

The mural's lesson is as timely today as it was in 1945. "It has a social message," commented Stoeckeler. "The competing history of the forests between conservation and exploitation still persists. It's a good reminder to people that we have developed good conservation methods, which should be implemented and upheld. There's no need to destroy the forests."

Turn-Off-the-Violence Day on Oct. 12 strives to create a more caring and peaceful community

By Judy Woodward

It is hoped that Thurs., Oct. 12 will be a quieter, gentler day for some area residents as they opt to "turn off" violent TV shows, movies, videos and music.

For the second year, the St. Anthony Park Community Council is supporting the annual Turn-Off-the-Violence campaign organized by the Minnesota Citizens Council on Crime and Justice as part of Crime Prevention Month.

By age 18 the average child has spent more time watching TV than in the classroom and has witnessed 18,000 showtime murders. Thus, the Citizens Council is encouraging Minnesotans to reject all kinds of violent entertainment on Oct. 12 and replace them with constructive solutions to the problems of violence in their own lives.

Although the St. Anthony Park

area isn't often troubled by violent crime, community organizer Abby Struck said, "The perception of violence is lower than the actual incidence of violence," because some forms of violence, particularly domestic violence or verbal assaults, "make us onlookers so uncomfortable that we look away" and refuse to acknowledge them.

She added that a slap delivered from a parent to a fretful child in the grocery store, for example, can be an act of violence, even if it's not likely to be included in official police crime statistics.

While acknowledging that St. Anthony Park remains one of the safest neighborhoods in a city "that is still safer than other cities," Struck warned against making what she calls compromises in the face of media violence. By permitting violent television programs, videos and movies into our lives, "we become desensitized to the problem."

Crime prevention coordinator Katie Utke contended that Turn-Off-the-Violence Day is not just about rejecting certain media products, but it's also about becoming aware of how commonplace violence can be in our lives when it's defined as "any words or actions that are intended to hurt others."

"People in this neighborhood think of violence in extreme terms and think it doesn't apply to them," said Utke. "But raising your voice or other actions calculated to injure others are also forms of violence."

However, Utke thinks St. Anthony Park has already discovered one of the secrets of strong crime prevention. "People here are neighborly, and they really know each other. That spirit of community is an important tool in fighting crime," she concluded.

Door-to-door Bugle delivery starts with this issue

This issue marks the inauguration of our door-to-door delivery service. Due to an anticipated increase in postal rates and rapidly rising paper costs, several months ago the Bugle started searching for a more cost effective and efficient way to deliver our 21-year-old neighborhood newspaper.

Our service is being handled by Independent Delivery Service (IDS). As a result of this change, the newspaper may feature special advertising supplements, which we were previously unable to deliver through the mail. Best of all, the Bugle is set to arrive at your door from Tuesday to Thursday during the week of publication, whereas mail delivery has often taken up to 10 days.

Thank you for reading the Bugle and for supporting our advertisers. If there are any problems with this service, please report them immediately to our office at 646-5369.

St. Anthony Park Community Council News

Council actions at a glance

At its September 13 meeting the council:

- Welcomed Ken Holdeman as new alternate for South St. Anthony and as the new chair of the Environment Committee.
- Heard a preliminary report from the Parking Task Force, which is looking into the question of parking ramp locations on the U of M St. Paul Campus. Since we were meeting at the Student Center on campus, there was brief a dialogue with Provost C. Eugene Allen as well.
- Voted to send a letter to the Parks Department and others regarding the serious problem of noise levels from the August concerts at Midway Stadium.
- Voted to recommend site plan approval for a parking lot on the former Schnitzer Ironworks site. EPA approval has been given, and this is a temporary (few years) measure to address the parking needs west of Westgate IV near Hubbard Broadcasting.
- Voted to send a letter to Public Works finalizing a community request for stop signs in the Bayless, Raymond, Manvel area.
- Voted to request that vending machines that dispense plastic bottles be removed from rec centers. It is not appropriate, since St. Paul does not recycle plastic.

Food pickup with recycling on Oct. 25

Food for the Merriam Park Food Shelf will be collected with your recycling on Wed., Oct. 25. Please put your canned or boxed foods or paper products in a bag or box. No glass, please, because these items are thrown onto the recycling trucks and may break. Mark your container FOODSHELF and put it out with your recyclables. The trucks do not stop if there are no other items.

The requests for help have been increasing dramatically and families in need are provided with food to help get them through times of layoffs, unemployment, medical problems and a variety of kinds of hardships. Eligibility is determined on a case-by-case basis.

Supercycle has been wonderful about helping with this effort. Volunteers then pick up the food at Supercycle and transport it to the Foodshelf at 2000 St. Anthony Ave. If you would like more information about the foodshelf, please call Roberta Reberts at 645-0349.

Permit parking informational meeting

There will be a meeting with city and community council staff and neighbors to discuss proposals for possible changes in the city ordinances governing residential permit parking. This will be a good opportunity to learn how the system works and where changes may be made to improve the system.

The meeting will be held at the St. Anthony Park Branch Library on Wed., Oct. 18 at 7 p.m. For further information, please call the community council office at 292-7884.

Council-sponsored meetings are listed each month in the Bugle Community Calendar (see page 17).
Everyone is welcome!

Miller and Lauderdale await Court of Appeals decision

By David Anger

Attorneys for the City of Lauderdale and for ousted city administrator Kathleen Miller faced three judges from the Minnesota Court of Appeals at a 30-minute open hearing on Sept. 12 in St. Paul.

After being dismissed by a three to two vote at an emotional Lauderdale city council meeting on Jan. 24, Miller filed a Writ of Certiorari with the Court of Appeals contesting the action. She charges that she was illegally fired from her job.

Miller was represented by attorney Dorene Sarnoski, while Lauderdale was represented by the League of Minnesota's counsel Mark Kruger. Judges Roland Amundson, Doris Ohlsen Haspeni and Bruce Willis heard the case.

Sarnoski told the court that the firing of Miller by Mayor Jeff Dains and members of the city council was "unreasonable, arbitrary and capricious." In response, Kruger argued that Lauderdale's decision to terminate Miller's employment was within its authority.

The nature of Miller's employment contract was central to both attorney's arguments, prompting questions from all of the judges.

Sarnoski contended that since Miller held a two-year contract with the city, there was an expectation of two-year employment. However, Kruger argued that Miller's contract was terminable at the will of the employer.

Both attorneys addressed the judges for approximately 15 minutes. In addition to discussions about the employment contract, the attorneys considered issues of performance.

Sarnoski opened the hearing, labeling Mayor Dains and Council Member Steve Froehlich with acting as "accusers, prosecutors and judges." She also argued that there had been no record of poor performance and that the charges leveled against Miller were "so vague" that she was unable to "respond in a reasonable way."

Kruger's case stressed that a record of poor performance had been documented. In addition, he said that Miller had been given notice of the city's intent to dismiss four days before the council meeting and that the former city administrator declined an opportunity to defend herself at the meeting.

The Court of Appeals legal review is not the same as a lawsuit. Since the city council is recognized by the courts as an executive body, the Writ of Certiorari had to be filed with the Court of Appeals.

The Court of Appeals provides citizens of Minnesota with prompt and deliberate review of all decisions of the trial courts, state agencies and local governments. Court of Appeals' decisions are the final ruling in about 95 percent of the 2,500 appeals filed annually. Typically, about 5 percent of the court's decisions are accepted by the Minnesota Supreme Court for further review.

The court reviews appeals in a timely manner. By law, the court must issue a decision within 90 days after oral arguments. This deadline is the shortest imposed on any appellate court in the nation.

The city council's decision to fire Miller proved to be highly controversial. Miller maintains that false allegations were made regarding her work performance and that the actions of the city council constitute defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress and gender discrimination.

At the time of Miller's firing, Mayor Dains listed lack of cooperation, insubordinate attitude, failure to follow through on council directives and resident complaints about mistreatment as some of his reasons for recommending her dismissal.

Megard carries primary over McLaughlin

By David Anger

Even though incumbent St. Paul City Council Member Roberta "Bobbi" Megard garnered the most votes in the Sept. 12 primary contest, the incumbent faces an ambitious challenge by Teri Walker McLaughlin, who is backed by Mayor Norm Coleman.

Megard carried the day with 56 percent of the vote, while McLaughlin pulled 38 percent. Michael Olenick, who barely campaigned for office, gathered 6 percent of the vote.

In the hot races for four seats on the St. Paul school board, three DFL-endorsed candidates and one conservative incumbent caught the most votes. DFL-endorsed candidate Neal Thao edged out incumbent Thomas Conlon for first place.

Thao drew 14 percent of the vote, while Conlon carried 13 percent. DFL-endorsed candidates Greg Felice and Al Oertwig followed with 13 and 11 percent of the vote, respectively.

Four other names will appear on the November ballot: J.H. Fonkert, Julie Glanz, Warren D. Grantham and Tom Snell. Glanz and Grantham join Conlon on the Republican ticket. Fonkert is DFL-endorsed, while Snell is independent.

Snell, who is running with the blessings of the mayor and Rep. Howard Orenstein, nicked out Linda Freeman and Mary Jane Reagan for eighth place, ensuring himself a slot in the forthcoming race. Reagan is a perennial candidate for public office and was formerly known as Mary Jane Rachner.

Community Council turns down the volume on Midway Stadium concerts

By Kristin Cooper

The St. Anthony Park Community Council voted at its Sept. 13 meeting to send a letter to city officials stating that it objected to granting noise variances for concerts at Midway Stadium.

The action came following comments by Vic Wittgenstein, a representative of the St. Paul Parks and Recreation department. The department owns the stadium.

He responded to concerns expressed by some members of the community following concerts at the stadium on Aug. 16, 17 and 19 sponsored by the St. Paul Saints.

Wittgenstein said mistakes were made in the weeks leading up to the concerts, including incorrect times on the original noise variance and missing decibel levels.

He said the timing of the variance also allowed for limited public input. The noise variance was granted by the St. Paul City Council just one week before the concerts were to take place. Some of the concerts were sold out.

Wittgenstein said changes would be made in the future. "It's important for Parks to work with community groups," he said.

The promise for future changes was not enough for members of the council.

Carole Mannheim, a South St. Anthony Park delegate, said that because of the position of her townhouse in relation to Seal Hi-Rise, she experienced stereo sound during the concerts. She called the noise level "unlivable and intolerable."

North St. Anthony Park delegate Alice Magnuson said that given the other noise problems affecting the neighborhood, including Highway 280, the State Fair and railroad, an additional source of disturbance was too much.

Wittgenstein said that although a decibel level of 100 was allowed under the noise variance, the concerts, especially on Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon, exceeded that level.

He said the city's licensing department was looking into the levels it recorded and might issue a ticket. While the fine associated with the ticket would probably not be high enough to have a real sting, he said, the ticket would appear on the record and could be considered in granting future variances.

Mayor and council seats contested in Lauderdale's November vote

By Barbara Claussen

Lauderdale's incumbent Mayor Jeffrey Dains faces a challenge in the Nov. 7 elections from Homer Lambrecht, former chair of the Planning and Zoning Task Force.

Lambrecht, a 15-year resident of Lauderdale, chaired the task force from its inception in March of 1994 until Jan. of 1995. The Planning and Zoning Task Force's goal is to update the city's Comprehensive Plan, which outlines the community's long-range planning.

Dains has served as Lauderdale's mayor for four years and was on the City Council for the two previous years. He has participated in the Personnel Committee, Restructuring Committee, and Recycling Committee and was a representative to the Ramsey County League of Local Governments.

There are also contests for city council seats. However, Denise Hawkinson is the only candidate for the two-year council seat currently held by Karen Gill-Gerbig. Hawkinson was an original member of the Park Committee and currently chairs the Park/Community Involvement Committee.

In contrast, four candidates are vying for two four-year council seats: Jack Barlow, Karen Gill-Gerbig, Daniel Gumnit and Julie Medbery. These seats are currently held by Jack Barlow and Susan Bardill, who is not seeking re-election.

Barlow has served on the City Council for four years and the Planning and Zoning Task Force since its inception. He has been a commissioner of the North Suburban Cable Commission for four years.

Gill-Gerbig was appointed to the City Council in April of 1995 and currently serves as a representative to the Park/Community Involvement Committee. She has been a member of the Planning and Zoning Task Force, the Park Committee and assisted with community events such as

Day in the Park.

Daniel Gumnit, a four-year resident of Lauderdale, chaired the Planning and Zoning Task Force for one year. The task force is currently working on a written draft of goals and policies for a revised Comprehensive Plan.

Julie Medbery, a 15-year resident of Lauderdale, participated in a Town Meeting on Dec. 8, 1994 sponsored by the Planning and Zoning Task Force. That forum sparked her interest in being more closely involved in planning the future of Lauderdale.

Art inspires conservation

A dear friend sent a postcard to the Bugle office from a far-off European capital: "Having a great visit. Stopped in London and now I'm traveling to Salzburg. How are things in and around the Park?" Our correspondent is missing a lot. For instance, there's the 50th anniversary celebration of Hazel Thorson Stoick Stoeckeler's masterwork, "The Epic of Minnesota's Great Forests." As our front-page feature story about Stoeckeler reveals, the great mural of Green Hall at the University of Minnesota is as instructive today about caring for the forest and the for earth as it was at the time of its completion in 1945.

To commemorate Stoeckeler's accomplishment we have composed a list of 10 simple steps to save the earth: 1) Turn down your water heater to 130 degrees. For every 10 degrees, you save 6 percent of the energy used; 2) Bring your own shopping bag. It takes a 15-year-old tree to provide 700 grocery bags; 3) Eliminate waste before you buy. Packaging waste accounts for about one-third of all the garbage Americans send to landfills; 4) Consider replacing light bulbs with a compact fluorescent light bulb. It uses a quarter of the energy and will last 10 times longer; 5) Buy rechargeable batteries for household use. Americans use two billion disposable batteries and 75 percent contain mercury, a highly toxic substance that can leak from landfills into the earth; 6) Ride the bus or carpool and, when possible, walk; 7) Install low-flow taps and shower heads, saving 17,000 gallons of water a year; 8) Keep your car's tires properly inflated. If everyone did we could save up to two billion gallons of gas annually; 9) Use reusable tableware instead of paper and plastic; 10) Buy an older home instead of building a new one.

We extend a big "thank you" to Stoeckeler for not only reminding us about the earth's fragility but for also creating an incredible artwork. Nowadays Americans are engaged in a divisive argument about what constitutes a civil society and art is at the center of the debate. Many foolishly believe that art is a destructive force. Instead, art possesses the power to both entertain and enlighten. Take a look at Stoeckeler's giant mural and see for yourself.

Unlimited parking meeting

On Oct. 18 at 7 p.m. there will be an informational meeting at the St. Anthony Park library to discuss the unlimited vehicle and visitor parking permits issued in St. Anthony Park. We shall learn why we are in an unlimited permit area whereas other districts near colleges and law schools are limited to four vehicle and two visitor permits. Other pertinent information will be forthcoming.

Do bring your questions and concerns to this meeting. One of the speakers will be Duane Jagiello from Public Works. Abby Struck, community organizer, has arranged this meeting.

Streets will be paved

I am writing to put to rest some neighborhood rumors about St. Anthony Park streets. I am well aware of the generally poor condition of the neighborhood streets, which are currently being sanded and oiled in their regular three-year maintenance cycle.

Neighborhood residents can be assured that this in no way implies that the streets will not be paved. The city made a commitment to its residents many years ago that we would have paved streets after the sewer separation construction was completed. We have been paying for street paving in other areas for years and we will have paved streets in St. Anthony Park.

The first streets in St. Anthony Park will be paved in 1996, with subsequent areas paved in future years. The Department of Public Works is ranking projects city-wide and a list of priorities will come to the City Council before the end of the year. The St. Anthony Park Community Council participated in this process by establishing guidelines for selecting priorities for streets in the neighborhood.

A second concern I have heard is that sidewalk curb cut-outs for disabled persons were completed on major streets in a separate process from street paving. This is also not an indication that the streets will not be paved, but rather a decision by Public Works to minimize disruption by not tearing up streets and sidewalks at the same time and an effort to comply with the federal Americans with Disabilities Act. Future curb cut-out work will be done on residential streets as they are paved or at the special request of a disabled resident.

I certainly appreciate the neighbors' concerns and I hope this letter addresses those questions.

Fourth Ward City Council Member

University parking, traffic and amusement center experts

Our University of Minnesota parking "experts" want permission for a $3 million parking ramp on the St. Paul campus, plus a large access road cutting through the wooded area on Cleveland Avenue and a jazzy lighted gateway to attract customers. From the Minneapolis campus example, we'll get lots of ramps, scalped hills and more traffic if the university "experts" prevail. Maybe Cleveland Avenue should be a four-lane?

There are numbers of problems, but the ramp and the uglification are only two. Is the campus growing rapidly or in fact not growing? Is a ramp really in demand, really needed? Who wants it and why? What in fact are the facts?

Ninety-five percent of the daily population on campus is in a six-block by five-block area, which includes inside it a mix of reserve and public lots able to handle about 1,200 vehicles per day. The fairgrounds lot, about three blocks by three blocks in size, is immediately adjacent to the campus and has capacity for about 2,400 cars and trucks. The fairgrounds lot on the east side is two blocks from Gortner Avenue, which has most of the buildings in which 80 to 90 percent of the students and staff do their teaching, learning and research. The fairgrounds lot also has the terminus for the new transitway to the Minneapolis campus, a five-minute bus ride.

The reason for looking carefully at the east versus west structure of the campus is that the destinations of most students and workers on the campus is either east or center campus, not west. The large surplus (yes, surplus) of parking space is east, the the transitway terminus is east. Then why do students and staff park in the St. Anthony Park residential area?

It's simple. Parking "services" raised prices enormously, even for fairgrounds lot parking, in the last few years, several hundred percent. Thereby they achieved four things: made it look like there is a shortage of nearby parking space for the majority of students-staff who have east destinations; raised money for parking ramps and cutting roads to the west, e.g., to Cleveland Avenue; satisfied the people running the student union on the west side of the campus; shoved the staging-waiting-recirculation of all buses into and out of the campus over to the west side on Cleveland-Eckles-Buford. The peculiar, merry-go-round high mileage bus and auto traffic layout as it exists now forces traffic into Cleveland on the west, even for east-going transitway traffic.

A couple of years ago a plan was developed to have the bus staging-waiting-main terminal area put behind the campus library, center (slightly east) on the campus. This is by far the most logical solution, not only in getting bus access closest to where the majority of people actually are going in their daily work. It also would help relieve traffic on Cleveland by eliminating the merry-go-round pattern and bus recirculation into Cleveland that we have now. It would move a lot of diesel smoke, fumes, noise and crowding away from the west areas including the union.

Why wasn't this done? Answer: The merchants in the student union got it shut off. To sell pizza, soda pop, etc., one maximizes traffic, and people waiting for buses; get them into the store. The purpose of the campus in their mind has nothing to do with research or teaching on the east side. Hence, make everyone gravitate west, to the union.

The contemplated $3 million parking ramp (300 cars, 150 for public parking), will not make a dent in the campus' actual parking capacity, especially if the fairgrounds lot is considered. Because of the costs, about $10,000 per car for ramp construction, plus costs of scalping and cementing the wooded area on Cleveland, ramp prices will be high, and most students and staff won't use it. In addition, the ramp will not relieve the St. Anthony Park residential area at all despite the blather about how sensitive the experts are to Park resident desires.

Something needs to be said in behalf of the majority of students driving in. Practically all of them work at outside jobs. They cannot get in and out of the campus on buses (except for transitway, which works very well) in any reasonable time. Students are in the same situation most workers in the Twin Cities are in. They have to get in and out quickly, and that means automobiles.

The sensible solution is to put the bus terminal-staging area east, on or near the transitway. Make the fairgrounds lot parking costs only enough to plow it and to give the fairgrounds people their 33 percent of whatever the take is. If the fairgrounds lot were free, the automobiles will go there, putting people close to where most people need to go, on the east. The ramp is not at all needed, nor the uglification, destruction of the scenic area on the west, nor the dense pollution that the "experts" have jammed on Cleveland Avenue.

I Sing the Body Electric

Many years ago, I read a short story by the science fiction writer Ray Bradbury, in which a man decides to, in contemporary parlance, "get a life." In order to make his escape from a wife he regards as something of a dud, he visits a company that specializes in manufacturing discreet and absolutely realistic duplicates of one's self: android stand-ins. The robot is soon delivered via the back door and the man plans to arise in the middle of the night, place his robot twin in the bed, and make a stealthy getaway. As he goes to bed, he condescends to give his clueless wife one last perfunctory kiss and, placing his head against her chest, is stunned to hear: "tick, tick, whirrrr."

As an adolescent, this story made sense to me in a rather perverse way. I had always had the perception that there were two different kinds of people in the world. Some people looked you in the eye. They spoke to you. They listened to you. They said, in some implicit sense I couldn't quite put my finger on, "I know you; you know me; here we are." Many other people seemed a bit diffuse, abstract. Their eye contact always seemed to miss by an inch or so. Their manner of conversation always gave me the urge to look under their sweaters for strings with plastic rings attached. This led me to develop the slightly paranoid theory that most of the people in the world were not real. There were only a few of us, dropped diabolically among a vast society of clever fakes. It was not always easy to recognize another one of us, and when I did, I often wondered whether they even knew the secret.

Now that I am a more mature, sophisticated adult, I realize that my youthful perception was not correct. Probably less than half the population is actually fake.

In my job as an academic librarian, I seem to meet such individuals regularly:

"Person": I'm looking for some information on fences.

Gregg Richardson
BUGLE COLUMNIST

Me: Are you thinking of decorative fences, or security fences, or perhaps livestock fences?

"Person": I asked somebody at the front desk, and they said I should come back and ask you.

Me: That's right. I need to know what kind of fencing you want information on, before we can look for some sources.

"Person": I found a couple of real good books about it a few years ago, but I can't remember the titles now.

Me: Okay. ... Why don't I just try the keyword "fences" in the computer here, and see if any titles look good to you. Here, what about these?

"Person": You know, I've never really used computers very much.

Me: Well, I can work the computer for you, if you'll just look at the titles, here.

"Person": My husband said he thought this library would probably have something on fences. Do you think you have anything?

And on it goes. It resembles a conversation. Grammar? Check. Syntax? Check. Inflection? Just right. Meaning? Perfectly clear. What was this conversation about? I don't have the faintest idea. I seem to have them all the time.

How do these "people" function in daily life, I've often wondered? Worse yet, what happens when they have to talk with one another? Well, traditionally of course, they have gone into politics. Congress is almost entirely composed of them. You hear their strings of non sequiturs on the news every night, as they struggle pathetically to mimic the speech of real people. But politics can account for only a tiny fraction of this vast fleet of talking toasters. How do the rest of them get by?

I have finally discovered the answer to these questions. They don't have to function in ordinary life. They have the Internet. Let me clarify that. They are the Internet.

As a cutting edge information professional, I am a frequent jogger along the edge of the information superhighway. The World Wide Web, the Gopher, e-mail, listservs, ftp, I've blundered across them all.

For those of you whose compelling interests have ranged from the Kennedy assassination, to the Protocols of the Elders of Zion, to the Trilateral Commission, I don't know whether you'll be pleased to know this or not, but your worldwide information infrastructure is owned and operated entirely by androids.

"People" on the Internet have names that are strings of characters not even recognizable as a human language, names like wksnx@cr4z.blip.ohoh. They communicate by means of brief, incomprehensible, ungrammatical and misspelled strings of words, and they even add "facial expressions" like :) and % ^), the same expressions they wear when they come into the library.

I briefly participated in an online discussion group this past spring, and I can assure you, I was very rapidly losing my grip before I finally managed to, in the curious syntax of Internet humanoids, "unsubscribe." Not only were two of the participants obviously dogs, and another a Proctor and Gamble trademark, but I'm pretty sure that qtpie@whoababy.zilch.hell, who was looking for a dominatrix, was actually a forklift.

Speaking of sex, if you are as worried as some of our congressmen about pornography on the Internet, let me just point out two things: First, the most sensual photograph I've ever seen on the Web was the outside of a molecular biology lab in Arizona. Second, even if there were dirty pictures, they could be nothing more erotic than crude and fuzzy photos of naked women on a cathode ray tube.

Just the sort of thing an android would mistake for sex.

Falcon Heights UCC seminar helps people face the aging process

By Laura F. Lee

Getting older? Everyone is, but there are many different ways to approach it. Some people get upset and worried, while others accept it and enjoy their mature years.

An upcoming seminar at Falcon Heights United Church of Christ focuses on better understanding the challenges of growing older and aims to help people have more optimistic, life-affirming experiences, rather than depression or negative attitudes.

The program, "Aging as a Journey to Wholeness," is a four-part series that presents the detours and milestones involved in the aging process. David Sperry, program director for Journey to Wholeness, leads the seminar. The detours point out some common steps in the aging process while the milestones are the acceptance.

"Aging is a natural process and there are levels of acceptance we can choose to do," Sperry said. "People feel anxious about aging."

One of Sperry's examples involves a person who is becoming more unstable physically and may need assistance through a cane, wheelchair or walker. Willingness to use a cane constitutes acceptance and a milestone in the process of aging. In contrast, refusing to accept help is a detour—and also a risk. While the milestones are the goals, Sperry points out, "Detours are OK, so long as we don't get lost there."

The seminar allows people to anticipate the challenges ahead. In addition, the program helps younger people to better understand aging parents or relatives. "It opens up the lines of communication between generations," he said.

"We also emphasize that we need not set goals for ourselves to have perfect aging or the perfect journey," Sperry said. "Life is not beautiful. We need rather to accept anxieties of aging without feeling that we've failed ourselves."

Journey to Wholeness, formed in 1991, is a nonprofit organization that focuses on people. "All of us, no matter what age, can be creative in whatever stage we're in and experience fulfillment at each stage," Sperry said. The mission of the organization is to develop innovative programs that offer healthy perspectives on aging.

"Aging is a natural process and there are levels of acceptance we can choose to do."

—David Sperry

The organization also prepares volunteers to present programs and facilitate support groups. It also runs a reminiscence program, which is a one-to-one meeting for older adults. These meetings allow the participants to review their lives and can lead to a healthy release. It also helps to integrate the participants' lives into a meaningful whole.

Collaboration with other organizations also helps Journey to Wholeness complement other groups, as well as receive help with their own programs and services.

The seminar begins on Thurs., Oct. 19, and will continue for four consecutive Thursday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. The cost for the series is $20 per person, or $30 for two people who register together. A manual accompanies the series and will be available for purchase during the seminar.

The life and times of Hazel Stoeckeler ... from 1

In many respects "The Epic of Minnesota's Great Forests" anchored Stoeckeler's life. Its large size underscores her multiple talents. At the age of 78, she is a dynamic figure. Her bright clothing reveals her inherent vitality and vivacious charm. No doubt about it, the artist possesses a "can do" attitude.

A retired college professor, Stoeckeler is busy these days. Really busy. In addition to the exhibition at the Larson Gallery, the Lutheran Brotherhood Gallery in Minneapolis is featuring a show of her watercolor impressions of the Norwegian Fjords throughout the month of October. She also lectures at Augsburg College of the Third Age.

"Now I have the chance to do what I love doing," she said about her art.

By the early 1940s, Stoeckeler was determined to become the "greatest mural painter." So, in Aug. of 1941—with $100 in her pocket—she traveled to Mexico to study the work of Orozco. Her advisor, Dr. Laurence Schmeckebier, had studied Orozco's work and arranged for her to meet the legendary artist.

When they met, Orozco said, "Ah, Dr. Schmeckebier, German, very thorough." The meeting was magical. Orozco proved to be kind and wise.

Although Stoeckeler wasn't paid for completing the mural, it did earn her a master's degree. In fact, Stoeckeler said that "The Epic of Minnesota's Great Forests" was the first creative project accepted as a master's thesis at the University of Minnesota.

"My teachers kept trying to turn me into an art historian," she recalled, "but that isn't what I'm about."

Through it all, Stoeckeler was unaware of her pioneering role as a woman in a male-dominated field. "It was unusual to be a woman," she remarked, "but I wasn't aware of it. The concept of feminism hadn't arrived yet."

When a young woman recently asked her why there weren't any women in the mural, Stoeckeler responded, "There were no women involved in forestry at the time. Period."

Thus, her presence in the forestry department was novel. She was surrounded by men, many of whom probably harbored romantic inclinations. But "I wasn't interested in getting married," she commented. "Remember, I was going to be the world's great muralist." Then fate intervened.

"I was painting the mural and a man asked, 'Have you seen the work of Orozco?'" Stoeckeler said. The voice belonged to Dr. Joseph Stoeckeler, a forestry researcher. "I've always said if he had asked 'Have you seen the work of Diego Rivera?' I wouldn't have paid any attention," she continued. "But here was someone who knew about Orozco—I was stunned."

They talked art and forestry. He promised to show her his slides of Mexico. "Not etchings," she laughed. The two fell in love and within two years they were married. Even though Joseph Stoeckeler died prematurely in 1967, they shared a rich life.

In 1946, the couple relocated to Rhinelander, Wis. There, Stoeckeler painted another large mural that still sits in the research headquarters of the Marathon Corp.

His work took them to Scandinavia, where she studied at the State School of Design in Stockholm. The organic qualities of modern Scandinavian design—which relied on natural woods, bright textiles and unusual shapes—appealed to Stoeckeler's aesthetic sensibilities. In Finland, she met Alvar Aalto, one of the most influential architects of the 20th century.

Stoeckeler has engaged in many careers over the years. She worked as a commercial artist, designing greeting cards.

She has also written a great deal. Then, too, she designed homes, including one in Rhinelander for her own family and for which her husband felled 199 trees and cut nearly 1,000 logs. When they returned to the Twin Cities, the Stoeckelers settled in St. Anthony Park.

Here in the Park, she designed their home on Como Avenue, which employed inventive materials and underground heating. "Then, I ran into sexism!" exclaimed Stoeckeler. "The contractors thought, 'What is this woman doing designing a home, and she's got a screwy idea for underground heating.' By the time he finished, he was ushering people through the house to see what can be done with heating." When Stoeckeler decamped to an apartment, her son Joel bought the home.

Stoeckeler is best known as a teacher. She is a professor emerita of the Department of Design, Housing and Apparel at the University of Minnesota. Her courses in environmental design were revolutionary. She advocated for useful interiors and objects, reflecting her overall artistic philosophy that "art should be both decorative and purposeful."

For those who think that a critical evaluation of history is a politically correct phenomenon, Stoeckeler says think again. "Reconsidering the past is not new," explained Stoeckeler. "We were doing it 50 years ago and people must continue doing it."

In addition to the exhibits at the Larson and Lutheran Brotherhood galleries, Stoeckeler is scheduled to sign copies of her book "The Epic of Minnesota's Great Forests, The Making of a Mural Painting" at Micawber's Bookstore on Sun., Oct. 1 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Hanson's Halloween tale finds its inspiration at Park Hardware

By Amy Causton

We've all heard of haunted houses, but a haunted hardware store? That novel twist on a classic theme is the basis for Bugle columnist and illustrator Warren Hanson's new book, "Haunted Hardware." The book is available locally at Micawber's Bookstore and also at Park Hardware, the store that inspired the tale of a do-it-yourselfer's worst nightmare.

The story in the book was originally published as Hanson's Bugle column in November 1988. "The response to it was greater than [to] most of the columns," Hanson said. After doing some sample illustrations for his publisher, Waldman House Press of Minneapolis, he got the green light to do the book.

"Haunted Hardware" is the sixth book Hanson has worked on and the second book that he has both written and illustrated. His first book, "A Cup of Christmas Tea," published in 1981, was on the New York Times best-seller list six times and this year will hit the one-million mark in copies sold.

The story is a long poem and was written by Twin Cities native Tom Hegg for his church's 125th anniversary celebration. Hegg called around looking for an illustrator and eventually hooked up with Hanson, who says he took six weeks to complete the illustrations. Since the initial self-published printing, the book has gradually gained broad popularity and recognition. Hanson and Hegg have since been profiled in Woman's Day, People and Guideposts magazines.

Hanson also collaborated with Hegg on four more books: "Up to the Lake," "The Mark of the Maker," "To Nourish Any Flower" and "Peef, the Christmas Bear," which comes out in October. In addition, he wrote and illustrated one other book, "A is for Adult," a humorous alphabet book for grownups published in 1993.

Hanson grew up in South Dakota and graduated from Augustana College in Sioux Falls. He always enjoyed drawing, but, he says, "It never occurred to me to make a career out of it because I thought artists starved." Eventually, however, he attended the School of Associated Arts in St. Paul (now the College of Visual Arts) and then took a job at an ad agency.

Before long he realized that he wanted to work for himself, so he founded Warren Hanson Organization ?nc. (WHO?), his one-man company, 21 years ago. Through it, he does freelance illustration and design, usually for advertising. He has won many advertising awards, with perhaps his most well-known work being the KS95 sun-face logo.

While he has been drawing most of his life, Hanson only began writing 11 years ago, with a piece he wrote about a big tree in his yard that had to come down. He submitted the story to the Bugle and was asked shortly thereafter to write a monthly column. These days he writes his column four times a year.

The column that eventually became "Haunted Hardware" was based on Hanson's wariness of home-improvement projects, which makes it somewhat surprising that "Haunted Hardware" is considered to be a book for children. When asked if he prefers to write children's books or books for adults, Hanson said, "I would like to make interesting books. The books I do have words and pictures, and the world thinks that books with pictures are children's books."

Hanson lives in St. Anthony Park with his wife Patty and their two children, Cody and Lacey. Keen-eyed readers of his books may recognize those names because in his last four books, Hanson has hidden the names of family members in his illustrations.

Hanson is appearing at Park Hardware for a book signing on Oct. 7.

Cozy Parkview Cafe serves homey food

By Christopher Wurst

Since co-owners Keith Hanson and Jan Meyer took over the Parkview Cafe in June of 1994, they and their employees have turned the restaurant at the intersection of Raymond and Hampden Avenues into a superior little eatery, with cozy comfort and quality homemade food.

The transition from the old Parkview to the Parkview of today was a huge challenge, Hanson said. They chose to retain the name and keep the diner theme, a decision fraught with difficulties.

"People know the old Parkview as the place that was never open," Hanson said, referring to the old cafe's ultra-early hours. Today the cafe is open until 9 p.m., Monday through Friday.

"We want people to know that you can still have traditional diner food, but that it can be prepared a little bit better than you get at home," Hanson said.

The food at the Parkview runs from standard cafe fare to more homestyle hand-cooked meals, and even a few truly outstanding dishes. The regular breakfast menu offers few surprises, just the basics. But the food is well-prepared, and thankfully free of an abundance of butter or grease.

The veggie omelette ($3.95) with green and red peppers, onions, mushrooms, tomato and cheese, was delicious. The vegetables were fresh and lightly sauteed, and the cheese was added with some well-advised restraint, enhancing instead of weighing down the meal.

The breakfast special menu, however, is where the Parkview really excels. It offers a tempting array of stuffed hash browns, with veggies and cheese, turkey or ham ($4.25-$5.95), Mexican omelettes ($5.95), or a Southwestern breakfast sandwich ($3.25). The super homemade biscuits and sausage gravy ($3.95) were improved by suggestions from a neighbor originally from the South.

Lunches don't venture too far off the beaten track. There's the usual list of burgers, BLT's and sandwiches, though they can substitute a veggie burger for any of the burgers on the menu.

Keith Hanson, co-owner of the Parkview Cafe with Jan Meyer, warmly welcomes diners to the St. Anthony Park restaurant.

We liked that there was a meatloaf sandwich—served hot or cold ($3.25), and at how many places can you still find a fried egg sandwich ($2.65)?

All the sandwiches are served on delicious thick slabs of whole-grain bread—the same bread the cafe staff toasts for breakfast. The daily luncheon specials are unique, such as homemade old-fashioned casseroles.

The dinner specials, too, are usually the best bet. Not only do they include a full meal, but dessert to boot. We were tickled to try the meatloaf dinner special ($5.95), which featured a generous slice of killer meatloaf with gravy, and the sumptuous "real skin-on mashed spuds" that accompany most of the dinners. The turkey dinner ($6.95) was also very satisfying, stick-to-the-ribs fare.

Where the Parkview shines, though, is in its eye for detail. At most cafes, a house salad would consist of iceberg lettuce and a tomato wedge or two. Here, the salad features two types of lettuce, tomatoes, onions and homemade croutons ($1.50).

Likewise, the desserts transcend usual cafe fare. We decided the bread pudding ($1.75) was the best we'd ever had in a restaurant. It was quite fresh with just the right amount of raisins and cinnamon, and tasty custard. The rhubarb crisp, which accompanied our dinner special, was also quite good.

The Parkview also features a variety of milkshakes, floats and malts. Using their vintage 1950s fountain equipment, the staff's caring hands whip up a myriad of cold delights.

Forty years ago there was a pharmacy and soda fountain where the Parkview now sits. Today's Parkview benefits greatly from having the pharmacy's original soda fountain bar, as well as many wood hutches and cabinets.

The cafe's atmosphere is casual and comfortable, as is the decor. Each table is slightly different: There's a round booth in one corner, while another wall uses a long wooden church pew. The large windows in front provide a generous amount of natural light.

The decorating is charming and quaint, with antique serving trays lining the walls and other touches of the past throughout the cafe. "Now all my friends are bringing me these trays," Hanson laughed.

Music in the Park's 17th season revels in quality and diversity

By Barbara Claussen

World-renowned musicians from such far-flung places as New York City and Los Angeles descend on St. Anthony Park in the months ahead to take center stage in the acclaimed Music in the Park series.

The Lark String Quartet, American Chamber Players, Halama Wind Octet, Transylvan String Quartet and the Los Angeles Piano Quartet top the series' 17th season. In addition to a jazz concert, violinist Chee-Yun is set to make her series debut.

St. Anthony Park resident Julie Himmelstrup, artistic director of Music in the Park exuded enthusiasm when asked about the concert series' 17th season.

"I'm really pleased with the quality and the diversity of the concerts," she said. "It's what we're known for." Her goals are to present very interesting programs as well as promote new music.

The 1995/96 season—Chamber Music: Quartets Plus—consists of six chamber music concerts and a jazz concert. All performances are presented on Sundays at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ, 2129 Commonwealth Avenue at Chelmsford.

"We also wanted to emphasize the talent of women as performers and composers," Himmelstrup reported.

The first concert opens with the New York-based Lark String Quartet at 4 p.m. on Oct. 15. The group has been awarded top prizes in competitions throughout the world including a gold medal at the 1991 Shostakovich International String Quartet Competition in St. Petersburg, Russia.

The Lark's performance includes the "String Quartet No. 2" by Alexander Borodin and a newly commissioned work by young Bulgarian composer Penka Kouneva.

On Nov. 12, the American Chamber Players offers a unique variety of instrumental combinations. The ensemble is set to perform the Minnesota premiere of "Suite for Horn, Cello, and Piano" by American composer Seymour Barab. Himmelstrup commented that this program will take on a slightly different format with commentary by Martin Goldsmith, the host of "Performance Today," National Public Radio's most popular classical music program.

In the New Year, the Halama Wind Octet, which consists of two clarinets, two oboes, two bassoons, and two French horns, performs on Feb. 11. The all-women ensemble, including St. Anthony Park resident Carole Mason Smith, premiere music

In its first American tour, the Transylvan String Quartet performs on March 3. The program includes Dvorak's "American Quartet" and "Quartet No. 4" by Bartók, who was born in the Quartet's namesake, Transylvania.

Making her Music in the Park debut on March 24, 23-year-old Korean American violinist Chee-Yun plays music by Mozart, Fauré, Ravel and Bernstein. Since winning the prestigious Avery Fisher Career Award in 1990, she has performed with the world's foremost orchestras including Washington D.C.'s National Symphony and Japan's NHK symphony.

The Music in the Park Series fifth annual Gus Donhowe memorial jazz concert on April 14 features world-renowned bassist Anthony Cox with Dino Saluzzi on bandoneon (an Argentinean accordion) and David Friedman on percussion, vibes, and marimba.

The series concludes with the Los Angeles Piano Quartet's performance on April 28, with works by Mozart, Brahms and Harbison. The quartet is known for its bold, exhilarating performances and exploration of interesting repertoire.

Music in the Park Series tickets for the six concert subscription are $54 or seven concerts for $60. Single tickets are $10 advance purchase or $12 at the door, $6 student rush.

St. Anthony Park
School of Dance

By Judy Woodward

As the murder rate in Minneapolis spirals upward, area residents are naturally concerned about crime. Is crime rising in St. Anthony Park and surrounding neighborhoods? Is our area less safe than it used to be?

St. Paul city officials say no. Laura Klepperich of the Research and Development Department of the St. Paul Police Department called St. Anthony Park "one of the safest neighborhoods in the city."

Try telling that, though, to a St. Anthony Park resident who doesn't want her name used. She wasn't home, luckily, when her front door was kicked in by a burglar on a recent summer morning. Neighbors, alerted by the pounding noises next door, called the police. But the burglar escaped and has not been caught.

"St. Anthony Park is still the kind of place where you can walk down the street at night."

Although she has lived in the area for more than a decade, this was the first time that this resident's home had been targeted. An enthusiastic booster of St. Anthony Park, she maintained that her recent experience has not increased her fear of becoming a victim of street crime in the Park.

"St. Anthony Park is still the kind of place where you can walk down the street at night," she said.

Statistics prove that she's right to feel safe on neighborhood streets. Violent crime against persons remains extraordinarily low in this area. City crime statistics for the first eight months of 1995 show no incidents of robbery, aggravated assault or other more serious offenses for North St. Anthony Park. During the same period, South St. Anthony Park reported less than half a dozen of these episodes.

On the other hand, property crime, including vandalism, residential break-ins and other theft—does play a small but constant role in the area. Trends are difficult to spot, since the overall numbers remain quite low.

St. Anthony Park Community Council Crime Prevention Coordinator Katie Utke believes that area residents are becoming more concerned about crime because of the media.

"Crime reporting [for the Twin Cities] is more in your face," as a result of rising murder rates in Minneapolis, among other things," commented Utke. "If I'm doing my job right, people should be more aware of what they can do to make themselves less likely to be a crime victim."

The recently burglarized St. Anthony Park resident has already taken steps to reduce her chances of future victimization. She installed a home security system immediately after the break-in. She said she hopes that by talking about her experience, "I can help people see that we're not living in a dream world," in the Park, and that anti-crime precautions are important.

Topics range from "Bonhoeffer and His Contribution: 50 Years After His Death" to "The Role of the Lutheran Church in the Reunification of Germany in 1989-90."

Children and their families are invited to the Children's Choir Festival at 3:30 p.m. on Oct. 28 in the seminary's Chapel of the Incarnation. All interested children are invited to sing in a massed choir under the direction of Pauline Sateren, well-

Where does your garbage go?

Ask your hauler

Some waste haulers in Ramsey and Washington Counties are dumping garbage in landfills in other states rather than using the County-supported Resource Recovery facility in Newport.

This facility separates and shreds garbage to make a fuel that is used to produce electricity. Because it recovers and reuses waste, and minimizes landfilling, it is the right way to dispose of garbage and protect our environment. Find out where your garbage is going. Here's how! ➡

Cut out this coupon and give it to your garbage hauler, or enclose it when you pay your bill. It asks your hauler to tell you where your garbage is being taken.*

*Garbage haulers are required by State Law to provide a written statement disclosing where they haul your garbage.

An Offer A Seller Can't Refuse

Most people assume that the highest bidder will always get the nod from a home seller, but in many situations this is not the case. The highest bidder does not always win. A smart seller will often accept a lower offer from someone who is certain to qualify for a mortgage rather than worry about a financially shaky buyer who might not even qualify for a loan to consummate the sale.

If the market is one where homes don't stay available for even a short time at the asking price, the buyer might want to make the offer one that will be hard to refuse. For example, sellers are very impressed if you can strike the finance contingency clause from the contract. (This is the clause that releases the buyer from the contract without losing the deposit if he cannot qualify for a mortgage.) However, do not even CONSIDER scratching the mortgage contingency clause unless you have the cash on hand to complete the transaction.

Other possible ways to strengthen an offer when in competition would be: increasing earnest money, increasing down payment, accommodating a sellers closing or possession date, and not making issues out of personal property.

Strategy, negotiations, and offer presentations are part of the expertise that a Real Estate professional can offer - for a Professional Who Cares - call Peggy Sparr Today!! 639-6383.
