Trucks off Como

St. Anthony Park Community Council supports measure, but City Council must approve

by David Anger

After years of lobbying, St. Anthony Park is moving closer to significantly reducing truck traffic on Como Avenue. Recently the community council passed such a resolution. Now, St. Paul City Council member Bobbi Megard is taking the measure to her colleagues for the final stamp of approval.

"It's a safety issue and a quality of life issue," said

Heather Worthington, executive director of the St. Anthony Park Community Council. "Como Avenue isn't the street for trucks."

The St. Anthony Business Association is supporting the measure too.

"The association is hoping that big trucks will be removed from Como Avenue," remarked Sue Davern, the business association's director. "These vehicles should be driving on Energy Park Drive, which is a designated truck route. If passed, St. Anthony Park will be quieter and shopping here will be an even better experience.

As proposed, truck traffic would be limited here, unless the vehicle had a bona fide delivery to an area business. Smaller vehicles such as UPS and Federal Express trucks will still be able to use the thoroughfare. Yet, semi-trucks would no longer be welcome.

"If it passes, this measure will quiet things down," Worthington added. "In addition, the infrastructure will take less of a beating. It will mean less repaving. It's a great move forward for the neighbors of St. Anthony Park."

In a related move, the community council affirmed a resolution that seeks to join Como Avenue to the grand round — an ambitious city-wide bike path that would join the Park from Como Avenue to Energy Park Drive, then connect with the bike route that leads to the University of Minnesota.

No parking will be lost. The bike lane will be striped outside of the parking lane. ■

Tailor made — Marjorie Hammond

by David Anger

Welcome to the garment district. No, not that slice of hectic urbanity on the isle of mid-town Manhattan, but right here in bucolic St. Anthony Park. Marjorie Hammond's studio is the place, where people from across the Twin Cities come panicking with sewing demands. The telephone rings and Hammond answers it. "I love my blue ultrasuede Halston coat, but I can't replace it," whispers a woman on the line. "Can you help?"

"No problem," says Hammond, a zesty, self-confident and iconoclastic 47-year-old mother of four. Moments later the phone chimes again. "I'm having problems finding a suit in my size, what can we do?" Again, Hammond tells her soon-to-be customer — "No problem, fitting problems are my specialty."

Funny thing, despite the doubling of retail space in the last ten years, many consumers find themselves snubbed in the marketplace. Most of her business is custom sewing. So, her customers tend to be larger or older plus just simply particular. Her work also spans from making a prototype mitten for disabled people to light upholstery work, including slipcovers. Hammond and her customers enjoy a love affair. Part tailor, part therapist, Hammond relishes the work. "It's a mutually satisfying relationship," she reports. "My customers have good taste and need help, and I'm there for them."

Better still, the price is right — $22 an hour.

Getting to Hammond's studio is fun. Climb a steep and narrow staircase near the corner of University and Raymond and once upstairs walk through a wandering maze of hallways. Her place sits at the rear, and the collage on the door tells customers that Hammond's no plain Jane. She possesses large, beautiful hands. Her hair is short, and no make-up crosses her thin lips. And if she ever decided to leave sewing behind, her lovely, slightly pitched voice would sound swell on the radio.

The sweet scent of lavender fills the air. Upon arrival, the seamstress explains, "I just cremated my lunch, so I'm burning some incense." Joni Mitchell's "Help Me" plays overhead and Hammond offers a quick tour. The small bird called, well, Bird chirps in its cage. A large shelf holds 250 spools of thread, acres of fabric and stacks of foam. Don't forget about the equipment: surger, a straight stitch, hemming machine, label machine, fabric cutter and steam iron.

Her walls resemble a Joseph Cornell box, bursting with bits of personal ephemera, from a tacky 3-D travel postcard to an Altoid poster to a doll pattern. Above a provocative Versace ad, Hammond added, "Housewife's sidekick."

Hammond's textile career started in 1975, when she took a design

Specialty building renovation in high gear

by Pete Keith

The once defunct Specialty Building at Raymond and University avenues is beginning to show signs of new life. The old windows are gone, the brick facade is being repaired, and a team of people is removing and replacing the old roofing.

Although we're just beginning to see the exterior work, "We have been working inside for well over one month," said Richard Pugin, a partner with IMI, the development company undertaking the renovation project.

The amount of interior work that needs to be done is extensive. "This building looks much better on the outside than on the inside, as the inside has deteriorated tremendously, especially in the last few years."

The building's interior is primarily a timber structure, including the roof decking and all of the floors. Poor roof drainage over the years has caused rotting in a lot of places, so "basically we're gutting the building down to the shell."

Despite the greater deterioration than initially seen, Pugin is extremely optimistic and excited about this current project, the first phase of which will result in a mix of office and storage space for the first and fourth floors. He has been especially pleased with the civic officials with whom he's worked to make the undertaking a reality. "St. Paul is one of the best cities I've worked with for this kind of project."

IMI worked cooperatively with a number of people and agencies, including the Department of Planning and Economic Development (PED). The agency helped IMI secure a $500,000 grant from the Metropolitan Council's redevelopment fund. Without this fund, the economics of the project would not have made the extensive renovations a viable consideration.

The Met Council's grant will help pay for the special cleanup and handling costs for asbestos and lead paint removal, both required for the structure to meet codes.

While the neighborhood seems extremely pleased with the prospect of new life for the old structure, the planned mix of storage and office space has come under some criticism. Some would like to see a development that brings in more people on a regular basis to the neighborhood; a development with more than one floor of office space, and perhaps some retail and a restaurant.

"We would love to develop

St. Anthony Park Community Council

NEWS

The St. Anthony Park Community Council meets the second Wednesday of each month in the South St. Anthony Recreation Center, 890 Cromwell Avenue. Meetings are open to the public, and neighbors are encouraged to attend. For more information, call the Council office at 292-7884.

At the September meeting of the St. Anthony Park Community Council, the following items were discussed, and motions made and approved:

- Motion to adopt the Como Avenue Bike Lane Resolution.
- Motion to send a letter to SRB and North Star Potatoes thanking them for eliminating the smell from the Compost Site.
- Motion to support the proposal for a four-way stop at Hillside and Gordon Avenues.
- Motion to remove plant materials around the South St. Anthony Recreation Center and replace them with suitable plantings with the help of local groups and the Parks and Recreation Department.
- Motion to approve the writing of a grant to cover costs for a Children's Garden at the southeast side of the South St. Anthony Park Recreation Center.
- Motion to regretfully accept the resignation of Joann Benesh South St. Anthony delegate.

Council Delegates Sought

The St. Anthony Park Community Council is seeking one delegate and two alternates from South St. Anthony Park, and one business delegate and two business alternates from St. Anthony Park. If you are interested in filling these vacancies, or know of someone who would like to get involved, please call the Council offices at 292-7884.

Garage Sale

The Neighborhood Garage Sale was a big success this year. Thank you to all who participated! The Council raised approximately $260.00 for youth activities in St. Anthony Park.

Report Crime in St. Anthony Park

Do you report crime? Have you experienced a recent theft, burglary, or break-in? It is very important to report crime — even after the fact. The St. Paul Police Department tracks crime in our area, and they assign police officers according to that data. If you see a crime in progress, call 911. If you discover a crime after the fact, call 291-1111 (the non-emergency number). If you feel threatened, or just feel like something isn't "right," please call 911. St. Paul is equipped with "enhanced 911" — the computer will automatically show your name, address and phone number when you call, but be prepared to confirm that information with the dispatcher. Even if you have to hang up, a dispatcher will call you back, and a squad car will respond if you don't answer. The answer to crime prevention is teamwork — you, the police, and your neighbors!

Goodbye to Joann Benesh

The St. Anthony Park Community Council wishes to thank Joann Benesh for her commitment to St. Anthony Park and the Community Council as a Council Delegate. St. Anthony Park will miss you! We wish you luck in your future endeavors.

Council-sponsored meetings are listed each month in the Bugle Community Calendar (see page 17).
Everyone is welcome!

Milton Square's 10th annual Octoberfest celebrates storm damage repair

by Kristin D. Anderson

Scottish Flair! Fall Festival! 10th Annual Octoberfest! Mark your calendar for this event on Saturday, October 4, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

By any name it's the same: Milton Square's way of saying thank you to the community and expressing appreciation for its patronage of the small business retail area.

"People like fall festivals," said owner Mary Ann Milton, a full-blooded Scot who selected the theme of "Scottish Flair at Milton Square" ten years ago.

Every year it is carried on with some Scottish entertaining. The theme choice also seemed appropriate in an area of European style homes, where even Milton's office, located on the corner of Carter and Como, is in a building that is an exact replica of an English Tudor house on a London High Street.

The annual horse-pulled carriage rides are a reminder of what was the mode of transportation when the building was constructed. These free rides are one of the most popular aspects of the Festival, but not just for the riders. Jacqueline Moren, an employee at Micawber's Bookstore, said how much she enjoys the "once-a-year sound of 'clip clop, clip clop'" as she distributes books for the children's treasure hunt. Micawber's is the oldest business in Milton Square. The newest, Rosa Mundi, will celebrate by giving out free helium balloons to the children.

A community festival creates all kinds of memories. An especially vivid image for Moren is the huge pumpkin on the sidewalk in front of the store last year. Guessing its weight was the challenge, and one little boy, who was smaller than the pumpkin, touched and reached and stretched, doing everything he could to help his dad check it out.

Fall means pumpkins, fall apples and homemade pies, and plenty of those will be available, making the day a true Octoberfest celebration for families.

Milton, surrounded by work to do and details to take care of, reminisced about the July storm that put so much water into the businesses at Milton Square. "The building was practically going to go," she said, as she recalled "a lot of wind, a lot of water." Windows had blown out, and water poured in. "It was so sad about the storm," she concluded.

Looking back on the trials of the summer, Milton concluded, "There is definitely a need to have the Fall Festival more than ever." So, mark your calendar to accept Milton Square's thanks on October 4 and to offer your own. ■

New problems in library remodeling project

The St. Anthony Park Library Design Committee hopes to raise $200,000.

by Judy Woodward

Library Design Committee members decided at a recent meeting to turn to community fund-raising in their efforts to whittle down the difference between allocated funds and projected costs of the St. Anthony Park Library remodeling project.

Disappointed with results of a second round of bids on the project, the committee has decided to attempt to raise the approximately $200,000 which will be needed to complete the project as designed by architect Philip Broussard of the local firm Architron.

In early summer, initial construction bids came in far over the $810,000 in public funds that had been budgeted for the project. At that time, the committee decided to put the project out for a second round of bidding, in hopes of getting a lower offer. The second round of bidding did bring forth some lower figures, but they weren't low enough to proceed with the project as designed.

Describing themselves as very satisfied with the design as it stands, committee members decided to seek additional community support rather than making alterations in the plan. According to Arlene West of the committee, the group will meet again September 30 in order to develop plans for fund-raising.

One benefit concert for the project has already been scheduled. On Sunday, October 5, Park cellist Laura Sewall will join Butch

The library remodeling project, which was approved in 1996, will expand the library by adding a new children's area and more storage. It will also make the building accessible to the handicapped through the addition of an elevator at the rear of the library. ■ the rest of the space for offices, but there is not adequate parking available." Therefore, according to Pogin, for both practical and zoning reasons, the structure can only feasibly have one floor of office space due to the limited parking. And it's not really feasible for IMI to provide additional parking facilities, because it's very expensive for a private venture to secure the financing needed to provide additional parking.

In Pogin's view, the city could provide additional parking at a fraction of the cost, because they have very low bonding costs. And economically it would make sense for the city to provide this parking, because it would help stimulate economic development in the area, which in turn would generate more property tax revenues.

Some cities have made this cost/benefit connection, and some have not. Pogin said many suburbs with a core downtown have begun providing accessible public parking to help bring people into those areas. Hopkins, for instance, had a deteriorating downtown, but now that there's more accessible parking, downtown Hopkins is thriving.

Although there is no current plan in place for either the city or IMI to provide additional parking near the University and Raymond intersection, the next phase of the renovation could include more office space if somehow the lack of parking were eased. In the mean time, the rejuvenation of Specialty is clearly a step in the right direction. ■

The St. Anthony Park Community Council is full of good news again. As our front page story reports, the group recently moved to drastically reduce truck traffic on Como Avenue, while also supporting a measure that hopes to create a bike lane on the thoroughfare. The community council attends to other, less news-catchy, tasks from parking problems to pollution. They also organize the annual neighborhood-wide garage sale and clean-up. People who volunteer with the community council thoroughly enjoy the experience. Still, representation from South St. Anthony Park is weak, especially with the recent departure of two delegates. Should you live in that borough, now is the time to consider becoming involved. There are lots of items on the plate, and you could help shape the future of the neighborhood in a very tangible way. Call Heather Worthington at 292-7884 for information.

Autumn grace

There is nothing like autumn, the sweet and brief season wedged between our difficult winter and fleeting summer. It's sweater time, when the sun is bright and the wind is cool. It's also the time of back-to-school, fundraisers, church bazaars, leaf raking, elections and Milton Square's 10th annual Scottish Flair Festival. More bittersweet, it's the season of lasts before the big chill — last bike ride, last picnic, last late-night walk in shirt sleeves and last lemonade. So, what good is sitting alone in your room, when life is a fall cabaret. Put down your knitting, book or broom and come outside. Savor this weather with your community. ■

Como Lake clean up

While I thank you for your well done front page article last month on how area residents can work to improve the water quality of our beloved Como Lake, I would like to say that I believe that one group and its leader did not receive proper credit for its efforts on the lake's behalf.

Sherri Knuth and Susan Schmidt on the Como Community Council's Environment Committee have been working hard on this issue long before the St. Paul Neighborhood Energy Consortium (NEC) became involved.

While I realize that the NEC's involvement on the issue has been very important (I am a member of the NEC's Board of Directors from the Como area), readers should be aware of Knuth and her committee's many hours of grassroots organizing and educational efforts, which were going on for several years before the current (and welcome) NEC involvement. Those efforts are to be lauded by everyone who is concerned by the condition of Como Lake after the severe algae blooms begin in the spring.

Please keep on putting out the word that the only thing that can restore Como Lake to its former state of much higher water quality is the efforts of concerned citizens and neighbors like those on the Como Community Council's Environment Committee.

C O M M E N T A R Y

A royal tribute

by Natalie Zett

I took off for the Labor Day weekend to escape the State Fair congestion, to run, and to write. Not very far. Just Eau Claire. There's nothing like getting away, even for a little bit. As I prepare for a trip, I always wonder the same thing: how will this trip change me? No matter what the duration or how far the destination, modifying the scenery casts everything in a different perspective. The same things, such as music that I hear daily on the radio, seem different in a new location. And learning new streets and finding new landmarks adds to the adventure. Also, getting away where there are no everyday distractions forces me to relax, gives me the luxury of solitude.

Saturday was great! I ran for many miles along the scenic Chippewa River. It couldn't be a more peaceful, sunny day. The only sadness I felt was that this marked the end of summer. After the run, I returned to the hotel room to clean up for dinner. Later, I wanted nothing more than a quiet evening of total hedonism — writing, reading, soaking in the hot tub, and channel surfing!

I flipped on CNN where a news bulletin flashed on the screen that Princess Diana had been in a car accident. I'm sure she's o.k., probably just shaken. I mean Camilla Parker Bowles was in a car accident a few weeks ago and she's fine. Another news flash that Dodi Al Fayed was killed. The announcer's voice quivered. I collapsed into a chair in front of the TV.

A couple of hours passed, and then, The Announcement. I burst into tears that gave way to wailing from deep within. My emotions jostled all over the spectrum. One minute deep, profound sorrow, so intense that I thought my heart would burst. Another minute, total numbness. What was going on with me? I didn't know this woman!

The details unfolded and I added rage to the emotional roller coaster. Sleep was fitful that night with crazy dreams about Princes Charles, William, and Harry. When I finally awoke, there was that moment of peace until I remembered the night before.

I went out for a morning run. Running through grief has always been one of my coping mechanisms. The tears streamed down my face again, and I was feeling boxed in by the profound sadness that I couldn't shake off. Being in a strange place, there were no friends with whom I could discuss this. On the one hand, I realized that other people died in the car accident. I realized that life was still going on. Yet, in that brief amount of time, the world stopped. It was just Diana.

When she was young, I found her endearing. That she never developed the stiff upper lip of the rest of the Royals delighted me. More often than not, she looked bored at auspicious occasions that she had to attend. She became animated when she did what she loved — being with her children, her friends, and reaching out to people in need. As things were falling apart in her personal life, it seemed to act as a refiner's fire. She was a Phoenix that emerged from the ashes and seemed unstoppable.

Usually I very quickly ascribe a meaning to tragic events. When my father died,

I derived strength. That helped me move on while carrying the sorrow. When Diana died, I felt hopeless. Her death grieved and angered me to the point where I railed out against a God that I barely believe in. I recalled Marlene Dietrich's observation: "Well, if there is something up there in the heavens, it's meshuganah (crazy)."

It was time to leave what seemed like another planet and return home. Once I reconnected with friends and family, I knew my reaction was not unique, but universal. One writer has a theory that each of us comes into life with "sealed orders" from God. The challenge is to figure out what they are, and once you figure it out, how to execute them. This writer claimed that this is the key mystery of life. It seemed Diana had grown to understand what her sealed orders were, was living out her destiny, and then, just as quickly, was gone.

It was after the funeral when I finally got some clarity, not in the cosmic sense, but for myself. Diana's death restored something in me that I didn't know I had lost: the capacity to feel and to care deeply. When I was younger, the abandon and passion with which I cared about others led me into all sorts of service, such as working in inner-city Detroit and Great Britain. But along the way, that naiveté had been taken advantage of. I had been profoundly hurt and slowly developed a guarded edge. The guardedness was only supposed to stay until I had figured out how to take care of myself. I learned to take care of myself long ago, but somehow still retained the defense mechanism. That which was supposed to protect me had, in effect, kept me from a very important aspect of myself. Somehow the powerful sorrow at Diana's loss cut through all of that. How this restored part of me will play itself out. ■

Falcon Heights scholar explores Attention Deficit Disorder

By Barbara Claussen

Jim had a history of academic failure, unemployment and depression. He had difficulty finding his car keys, managing his checkbook and getting places on time. His frustration and anger often created tension in his marriage and alienated his friends.

When he was diagnosed in his early 30s with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), Jim felt relief. Finally he had an answer for all the years of pain and struggle. The reticular activating system at the base of his brain that helps people sort information was not working normally.

Falcon Heights resident Lawrence Greenberg, Professor Emeritus at the University of Minnesota, reported "the big problem with adults with ADHD is that most of them have not been diagnosed." Former head of Child Psychiatry at the U, Greenberg works in private practice, does consulting, and ADHD research. He said that most adults, even if they were hyperactive as children, are not hyperactive as adults. They may be nervous or edgy.

Greenberg believes that people with ADHD have two sets of problems — one created by their condition and another set of problems that are secondary.

"Undiagnosed adults have a muddled sense of something being wrong," related Greenberg. "They have the sense that they are working harder but not living up to their potential. Some consider themselves lazy or dumb in spite of the fact that they may be quite successful."

Greenberg considers the secondary set of problems to be more important. "Some people have difficulty managing their anger. They tend to try to suppress it but it pops out at times. Aggression, low self-esteem and drug abuse are common." He added that many sufferers medicate themselves with excessive use of cigarettes, caffeine, alcohol, and other substances.

"My bias is that if we had treated them as kids, they wouldn't have these problems," said Greenberg.

The classic difficulty with inattentiveness, particularly with repetitious or boring tasks, takes its toll. Impulsiveness and trouble with "executive functions" are also characteristics of the disorder.

Spouses and significant others end up annoyed. They accuse the person of not listening, being irresponsible, messy and disorganized.

"We often see some degree of family problems," reported Greenberg. "On the job a number of adults seek out positions that are under at work, his office structure was altered so he no longer had a private office. When he was forced to share his space with 12 other professionals, his work began to deteriorate. Distracted by someone else's phone or computer, he began to make some serious mistakes. He was put on probation and almost lost his job despite over 20 years with a good record. Fortunately this story has a happy ending. During the crisis he was diagnosed with ADHD, was able to retain his job and now has a private office.

The third group has problems in both areas — they are easily bored and they have difficulty

Robert Greenberg reports that many educated and successful adults suffer from Attention Deficit Disorder. The complex manifests itself in several disturbing ways, adversely affecting productivity, personal satisfaction and relationships. Fortunately, help exists for sufferers.

their ability."

He explained that employment brings out three sub-groups that face unique challenges. Those in the first group primarily have a problem with boring tasks. They need to have jobs that provide stimulation or excitement. Many find success with sales, which provides an opportunity for interesting interaction with people.

Greenberg explained that individuals with ADHD have the surprising ability to "hyperfocus." They are able to so "get into" a task that it is difficult to get their attention.

Computer jobs are excellent because they are interactive, provide immediate feedback, and allow the person to hyperfocus.

A second group of ADHD sufferers finds it impossible to focus when their environment exudes stimulation. At a party with small groups of people talking, the ADHD person will not be able to pay attention in their subgroup because of conversations or movements from people in other groups.

Greenberg tells a story about a brilliant man in his mid-50s with a doctorate in science. During a corporate down-sizing maintaining attention in high stimulus situations. Greenberg believes that help for people in the workplace is "just a beginning effort." He observed that if people had known they had ADHD when they were teenagers, counselors could have suggested vocational choices and college programs suited to their needs.

Treatment options include medication and counseling. "In about 50 percent of the cases, adults will still need medication," advised Greenberg. The other half will not benefit significantly from medication. He mentioned a surgeon who manages his life by keeping his environment active. He declines to play bridge or doubles tennis but does very well at handball. Surgery and making the rounds at the hospital hold his interest, but he takes Ritalin two times a week.

ADHD impacts the person's family. "I don't think we're looking for a problemless solution," admitted Greenberg. "We're looking for things to be better. People would like to have perfect outcomes, but that just doesn't happen under any circumstances."

He emphasized that situations can get much better for many people. Out of thousands of cases that he has worked with either directly or indirectly, he cites less than a dozen that showed no improvement.

Greenberg currently collaborates with his wife, Carol Kindschi, R.N., M.S.N., on the TOVA Research Foundation, which partially funds over 300 studies in most states and many countries. Greenberg created the TOVA test — Test of Variables of Attention — a diagnostic tool used since the early '80s to detect ADHD.

Mixing and shaking at the Minnesota School of Bartending

by Laura Pritchett

So you say you want that martini shaken, not stirred? Then your bartender better know the intricacies of bartending, for getting a drink just right is no easy trick. At the Minnesota School of Bartending near University and Raymond, students learn to do just that.

It's at this school that a student learns to pour a vertical line and memorize the difference between a regular, dry, and perfect Manhattan. And it's here that a student learns which 12-year-old scotch may be substituted if a customer orders a Pinch and soda, but the bar is out of the Pinch. A unique classroom, the Minnesota School of Bartending is the oldest bartending school in the state, and also claims to be the largest and most modern bartending school in America.

What makes this school of bartending so unique is the gargantuan size of it all — there are 30 "stations" — each set up to look like a well stocked bar. One student stands behind each of these, pouring drink after drink. A little ice, the gurgle of liquor and splash of soda, a garnish, maybe even a colored

And boy, do they make drinks — students are required to memorize the recipe for nearly 80 popular drinks, from the relatively simple whiskey straw — voila! and the drink is dumped down the sink. Then the student starts on another.

Here, the liquor in the bottles is really colored water, but the garnishes are real. Bowls of maraschino cherries and lemon slices sit at each station. There are also bottles of tabasco sauce and canisters of nutmeg. There is Worcester sauce and coconut syrup, crushed and cubed ice. All this to teach and waters and the scotch and sodas to the Long Island Iced Teas, Alabama Slammers, and the many versions of Sex on the Beach. Not only do they need to know the right combinations — they're also required to study a row of liquor bottles that appears to be about a mile long, all categorized by type. Before they graduate from this school, they'll need to memorize the various brands of liqueurs, brandies, whiskeys and wines. They'll need to know the difference between Irish whiskey and rye whiskey and the difference between a daiquiri and a bacardi. They could tell you that the difference between a martini and a gibbon is all in the garnish — a martini gets an olive, and the gibbon has the pearl of an onion. And then there are the glasses: highballs and lowballs, the fiesta and the cocktail, the wine, sherry and cordial glasses. Which drink goes in which glass, in which order, with what brands, and with what garnishes. Tending bar is no easy trick.

The Minnesota School of Bartending doesn't just teach the intricacies of pouring libations — they also have a job placement service and many of their students are placed in the finer local hotels and restaurants. Mark Lange, the manager, said that every student gets his or her own bar, and at this school, there are no schedules — students come and go whenever they have time, practicing making drinks until they pass the test. Mixing, shaking, and pouring them down the sink until they've got it all right. After they pass a test, students leave with three certificates: two on bartending and one on alcohol awareness, which certifies that they know about the laws, when to cut customers off, and other safety measures.

Many students, Lange added, just want part-time work — an occasional party or wedding on the weekend. In fact, the school is called an average of 20 times per week to provide bartenders for large events. There are also students in it for the full-time work — they're ready to lend an ear, become a confidant, and make a career out of pouring drinks right.

The school has been teaching the art of pouring libations in the same location for over 30 years at 2426 University Avenue. Dick Lange, the owner, started the business in 1968, and the school now has over 10,000 alumni — all pouring perfect drinks, but this time, they're not headed for the sink. ■

YOUTH NEWS

Teen beat — Friday night fever

by Cheryl Rushenberg

Neon signs are needed for the successful Friday teen night at St. Anthony Park United Methodist Church, which is celebrating its tenth year of service to the community. Attendance has always been high, but recently the gathering has attracted as many as 120 young people.

The kids love it. Junior High students are highly social and need an outlet. Since there is no way this large number of kids can meet up in someone's home, a mall or even a restaurant, the church basement becomes mecca. Friday night provides relief from the social structures of cliques that seem to keep kids from really mixing. Mayda Miller, an 8th grader at Capitol Hill School, reported that she likes meeting people different from herself as well as those who attend different schools.

The space also makes teen night at St. Anthony Park United Methodist a hit. It's an ideal escape, when young folk suffer from cabin fever. It possesses a warm and charming aura, almost a coffee-house atmosphere. There are several rooms with high ceilings and big oak doors, a truly cozy joint. Then, the big parlor room hosts the modern super-screen TV. There is a billiards and foosball room plus places for playing cards and board games.

St. Anthony Park United Methodist strives to create an inclusive and caring evening. And at its best, teen night is a place where kids' characters are possibly more important than the label of their jeans.

The gym room is the biggest space for such favorites as ping-pong, hacky sack and floor hockey. And the huge kitchen is the best spot for scooping up a fresh slice of pizza.

The program is accessible and freely structured, which the teens love. In their workaday life they shuffle from school to practice to lessons. It's the age of the highly programmed child. Teen night, however, provides a respite from the rush of schedules. Better still, St. Anthony Park United Methodist strives to create an inclusive and caring evening.

And at its best, teen night is a place where kids' characters are possibly more important than the label of their jeans.

Teen night is also the best entertainment in town. A dollar donation is the fee, considerably less expensive than going to the movies. The nominal donation helps off-set expenses such as buying pizzas and ping-pong balls, among other items.

This festive evening was the invention of lay people and the Rev. Greg Renstrom, who recently left the congregation after 12 years of ministry. Believing that the church should be open on days other than just Sunday mornings, Renstrom advocated novel programs that now make this church complex a community hub. The minister rarely missed a Friday night and knew all the kids by name.

Now, during its 10th anniversary year, the faithful volunteers are asking for help. The group hopes to raise $10,000. This money will replace equipment and hire a teen night coordinator. Beyond money, teen night also needs volunteers. To lend a hand contact Mary Markgraf at 645-8994. ■

Mendelssohn String Quartet on October 19

Music in the Park Series opens its 19th season with the New York-based Mendelssohn String Quartet and special guest Robert Mann — of Juilliard Quartet fame — on Sunday, October 19 at 4 p.m. at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ, home to the series since its inception.

Praised for imaginative and inventive programming, the quartet will perform works by Haydn, Janacek and its namesake, Felix Mendelssohn.

Violinists Nick Eanet and Nicholas Mann, violist Maria Lambros and cellist Marcy Rosen — “Four well-matched but distinct characters pursuing one musical end . . .” (The New Yorker) — bring a taste of their “Words with Music” series to Music in the Park with Janacek’s Quartet No. 1, which was inspired by the narrative of Leo Tolstoy’s short story The Kreutzer Sonata.

Special guest Robert Mann, first violinist of the Juilliard String Quartet for 50 years, joins his son Nicholas and colleagues as second violist in the Quintet in B-flat Major by Mendelssohn. The program opens with Haydn’s high spirited Quartet in D Major, Opus 20, No. 4.

The Mendelssohn String Quartet has performed at Carnegie Hall, Kennedy Center, the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam and Wigmore Hall in London, appearing with an array of prominent guest artists from pianist Peter Serkin to violinist Jaime Laredo and flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal. Currently Quartet-in-Residence at the University of Delaware and the Blodgett Artists-in-Residence at Harvard University, the ensemble is also the resident quartet of the Eastern Shore

Chamber Music Festival and formerly the resident quartet of the Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival.

A 1981 Young Concert Artists International Auditions winner, the Mendelssohn has received grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, the New York State Council on the Arts, and Chamber Music America.

Music in the Park Series, founded in 1979 by artistic director Julie Himmelstrup, is celebrating its 19th season of presenting chamber music and family concerts for listeners of all ages.

Music in the Park Series season tickets are $60 to $75. Single tickets are $12 to $20 ($6 student rush). Tickets are available at The Bibelot Shop (646-5651) and Micawber’s bookstore (646-5506) in St. Anthony Park. For tickets and information call 646-5266. ■

GETTING IN SYNC WITH SINKS

The material homeowners choose for the sinks in their remodeled bathrooms can have considerable effect upon how the sink looks, how long it will last, and how much maintenance it will require. Porcelainized cast iron sits atop the durability list. However, sinks of this type are heavy and difficult to maneuver. Enameled steel, on the other hand, is lighter in weight, but it does not wear as well as porcelainized cast iron. Stainless steel, also a good deal lighter than cast iron, is durable and remains unaffected by household chemicals; however, it does tend to show spots from hard water and soap. Fiberglass reinforced plastic lends itself readily to molding into a variety of shapes, but it does not hold a shine as well as other materials.

If you are considering remodeling your bathroom, THE TRANSFORMED TREE invites you to call us and meet our professional design team. Our design consultants are always ready to help you in the design and layout of your bathrooms. As a top remodeling contractor and custom cabinet maker for 24 years we do the job right the first time. From simple renovations to complex additions we are ready and eager to help you.

ARTS EVENTS

EXHIBITS

Ink Clouds: The Calligraphy of Jin Seien continues at the Goldstein Gallery through October 22.

The exhibit features the work of Jin Seien, who explores the aesthetic, cultural, historic and social contexts of Japanese calligraphy plus decorative arts, dress and textiles.

Seien is a master calligrapher from Yokohama, Japan, and his work is part of the museum's permanent collection.

The Goldstein is located at 241 McNeal Hall — 1895 Buford Avenue — on the St. Paul Campus. It is open Monday - Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Thursday, 10 a.m. - 8 p.m., and weekends, 1:30 - 4:30 p.m.

Suspended Truth: James Church and Jeffrey Hanson — a joint exhibition of paintings and sculpture by James Church and Jeffrey Hanson is on view at the Paul Whitney Larson Gallery through October 17. Beginning October 20, the gallery features Getting Down to Earth: Images of Women Farmers. The Paul Whitney Larson Gallery is located at the St. Paul Student Center.

MUSIC

Enjoy fantastic jazz and raise money for handicapped accessibility, when Butch Thompson performs a benefit concert on Sunday, October 5, 3 to 7 p.m., at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ. The event benefits accessibility projects at the church and the St. Anthony Park Branch Library. Cellist Laura Sewell and cornetist Charlie DeVore join Thompson, performing music by Scott Joplin, Jelly Roll Morton, Duke Ellington and Thompson's own version of elevator music. The fun begins at 3 p.m. with a "Taste of the Park" reception and silent auction, followed by a 4 p.m. concert. Tickets cost between $30 and $100. Call 645-7934.

Sacred music is at the core of Luther Seminary's Reformation Festival from October 24 to 26.

Martin Luther wrote many hymns and several will be sung in traditional form, but festival organizer Gracia Grindal is also aiming at reinterpreting the music of yesteryear.

"We Lutherans are the singing church," said Grindal. "If the church doesn't have song, it doesn't have much that will get under people's skin."

Guests include the Choral Concert jazz ensemble, Songfest with the Gustavus Choir and Luther Seminary Friends.

Call 641-3486 for details.

WRITING

The St. Anthony Park Writers Workshop meets on Tuesday, October 7, 7:30 p.m., at 2304 Carter Avenue. Call 645-6970 for information.

MOVIES

St. Paul Student Center's Roxy Films: October 1 and 3, Chasing Amy, Kevin Smith's final installment in the New Jersey trilogy;

October 8 and 10, Swingers, Doug Liman's comedy about five serious-minded men who try to cope with work and women troubles; October 15 and 17, Ulee's Gold, Victor Nunez directs this superb drama about a solitary beekeeper living in the tupelo marshes of the Florida panhandle; October 22 and 24, Manhattan, Woody Allen directs this delightful comedy about the search for the ideal relationship; October 29 and 31, Beetlejuice, Tim Burton's smash box office comedy about a ghostly couple trying to scare a family away from their old home.

Movies are shown at 7 p.m. on Wednesdays and 7 and 9:30 p.m. on Fridays. They cost $1 for students and $2 for the public.

TALKS

University Grove resident Joanne Eicher discusses "The Fabrics of Our Neighborhoods" on Thursday, October 9, 7 p.m., at the St. Anthony Park Branch Library. Her talk explores ethnic heritage through examining African American, American Indian, Hispanic, Asian American and European textiles. Eicher is a Regents' Professor of Design, Housing and Apparel at the University of Minnesota. ■

GOOD WORKS

Teens find work helping older neighbors

by Judy Woodward

Herbert Noble had a heart attack last spring, and when the warm weather came, the longtime St. Anthony Park resident knew he wasn't up to doing the spring chores. Luckily, he knew whom to call.

Sara Clasen-Braun, senior chore service coordinator for the St. Anthony Park Community Council, is in the business of fixing up seniors who need a little help around the house with local teens who need a little extra cash.

Clasen-Braun maintains a list of about 150 area residents who want assistance with common household chores such as cleaning or lawn mowing plus seasonal jobs like leaf raking, storm windows or gutter cleaning. Then she pairs the elderly up with young employees whom she recruits through the schools and youth centers. "I work real hard," said Clasen-Braun, "to place kids with people who live in their own neighborhood." It's an important consideration since most of the youthful participants are below driving age.

Clasen-Braun remarked that her service suggests pay guidelines for particular jobs, but she emphasizes that the Chore Service is a referral service, not an employment agency. "I try to give each senior at least three names of potential job seekers," she explained, "but it's up to the individual youth and senior to negotiate the actual pay rate."

Clasen-Braun also has a very limited amount of funds available for subsidies in cases of financial need, but she added that the vast majority of the matches she sets up between teenage worker and senior employer are strictly private sector.

Job seekers must be at least age 12. For some teens, the Senior Chore Service can offer a welcome introduction to the working world. Daryl Rufenacht, father of 15-year-old Wes, reported that his son was in his second year of finding jobs through the service. The Como Park teen, who attends St. Agnes School, has been the steady employee of a neighborhood senior whom he first contacted through the Chore Service. Rufenacht explained, "Wes is real active in sports at school. The chores are something he can do after sports. He can fit them in, and he really likes the flexible part of the job." Young Rufenacht has three lawn-mowing jobs, and adds other chores when time permits.

As for Herb Noble, he got lucky. "Sara Clasen-Braun had been given notice by Catholic Charities that they had a group who were looking for service opportunities. There were 13 of them. They came out and washed the windows, changed the storms for screens, and even dug the garden. Because there were so many of them, they got it all done in one day. And it was free!"

Although he can't count on free help every time, Noble, who suffered another mild attack in August, said he definitely plans to call the Chore Service again.

Would-be employers and prospective teen employees can call Clasen-Braun at 292-7884 for more information. Seniors must be over 62. ■

assistant job in her native city of Los Angeles. Next, she worked as a pattern maker, a job that demands draftsman-like precision. Yet, she didn't study fashion or tailoring. Like her customers, Hammond says, "Clothes didn't fit me right, so I started sewing out of need." Even so, sewing is a family affair. Her cousin is a designer and her brother works as an upholsterer. Hammond's grandmother, a Russian immigrant, spent hours in Herald Square, studying the goods in Macy's and Gimbel's windows. Her visual memory was astounding. Later, she'd go home and produce an exact replica of the dresses she had witnessed on Broadway. Hammond inherited this rare gift. Being a roaring Leo, she works quickly. Her mother used to say, "Slow down, you're sewing too much."

After working for three years in L.A., Hammond and family packed their bags for Santa Barbara, that enchanted Pacific village where millionaires wear t-shirts. There, the Hammonds forged a cottage industry. Diapers. Not just diapers, but plastic diaper covers for cloth nappies, known as Rubber Duckies. The results — huge sales, exceeding their wildest expectations. Soon enough she became a former hippie turned capitalist, overseeing a $2 million enterprise with 45 employees.

Still, as the score from Follies skeptically sings "Every height has its drop," and Hammond found herself traveling constantly, attending 10 trade shows annually and shuffling from meeting to meeting. There was more pain than gain — "Twelve years of insomnia and angst," reports Hammond. "It was intense, and I spent my days schmozing with people that I couldn't stand. I rarely saw my kids, and I always had jet lag. After suffering a second panic attack at the luggage carousel at L.A.X., I decided that something had to give."

Then, the once plentiful business plopped and so did the owners. "Losing the business was like losing a child," Hammond explains. So, the couple did what many other hippies turned capitalists began doing in the late 1980s — they dropped out. Worse yet, she endured an incredible personal loss, when her husband died of cancer in 1988. Later, Hammond remarried and moved to Minnesota six years back. "I always wanted to live in the Midwest," says Hammond. "After traveling so much I knew the Twin Cities, and I fell in love with its beauty and its schools. It was scary. I had to start over. Yes, it was kinda wild and crazy, especially since we had all of two friends here, but I wouldn't change anything."

Life is great. When she's lonely, Hammond visits the library or a museum. She doesn't drink caffeine or alcohol. West Side Story is her favorite musical and Interview is her favorite magazine. Frankly, she can't name many designers other than Carol Little. She appreciates a bargain, shopping at Ax Man and Savers. Her hands are always working. These days her prime hobby is making wind chimes. About the job, Hammond concludes with a forthright smile, "I love my job." Her number is 644-4555. ■

Marcella and Robert Boyd

Longtime St. Anthony Park residents Marcella and Robert Boyd died within two days of each other, Marcella on September 2 and Robert on September 4. Marcella was 84 and Robert 85 years of age. They lived on Doswell Avenue from 1942 to 1995, when they moved to Blooming Prairie, Minnesota.

Marcella Boyd was a graduate of Blooming Prairie High School and St. Olaf College with a degree in home economics. Robert Boyd graduated from Roland High School in Roland, Iowa in 1930. He received his B.A. from St. Olaf in 1934, his B.D. from Luther Seminary in 1938, his M.Th. from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1939, and his PhD from Princeton University in 1942.

The Boyds were married in Blooming Prairie on August 16, 1938. They recently celebrated 59 years of marriage. Before their marriage, Marcella taught at Owatonna State College. She was a substitute teacher in St. Paul, while her husband was an instructor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis at Luther Theological Seminary from 1942 to 1982.

Robert Boyd was also pastor at St. Steven's Lutheran Church in St. Paul from 1941 to 1946, at Humboldt, Iowa, in the summer of 1938, at Jersey City, New Jersey, in the summer of 1953, at Oxnard, California, in the summer of 1948, and at San Pedro, California, in the summer of 1962. He studied at a Land of the Bible Workshop in Israel in 1955, at the University of Heidelberg, Germany, from 1959 to 1960, and at Union Theological Seminary in New York from 1967 to 1968.

While at Luther, Robert and Marcella Boyd made many trips to the Holy Land, where he led two archeological digs: Hebron in 1964 through Princeton Theological Seminary and Caesarea maritime in 1975.

Both are survived by children, Anne Prestegard, of Owatonna, and Paul, of St. Anthony Park; and six grandchildren. Marcella is survived by sister, Julie Jofson. Robert is survived by two brothers, Otis and Don.

Donald Harvey

Donald U. Harvey died on August 14. Born on September 25, 1895, he was six weeks short of reaching his 102nd birthday.

Harvey lived on Cleveland Avenue just north of the Falcon Heights border for over 60 years. Most of his life centered in the St. Anthony Park area, where he was an active member of the St. Anthony Park United Methodist Church and the St. Anthony Park Leisure Center.

He was a longtime employee of the agronomy department at the University of Minnesota. He served as supervisor of plot research. He was also a longtime volunteer at the Presbyterian Home in Arden Hills and became a resident there the last few years of his life.

Preceded in death by his wife, Hazel and daughter, Dorothy, he is survived by children, Margaret Stichm and Donald Harvey; six grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren.

Berniece Johnson

Berniece "Bee" Johnson died on August 22 at the age of 87. She was a longtime resident of Falcon Heights.

Johnson was a member of Como Park Lutheran Church. She was the widow of Curtis Johnson, former principal of Alexander Ramsey High School in Roseville.

Lloyd Nelson

Lloyd Ingren Nelson, a longtime resident of St. Anthony Park on Raymond Avenue, died on August 12. He was 98 years old.

Born on a farm in Cottonwood, Minnesota, he attended local schools, and the University of Minnesota.

Nelson was always engaged in activities relating to agriculture, including four years with the Farm Security Administration and 26 years with the Federal Land Bank, retiring in 1963 as assistant vice president. He was a member of Como Park Lutheran Church and lived in recent years at the Presbyterian Home in Arden Hills.

Preceded in death by two wives, Phoebe and Selma, children, Grace and Ralph, and brother, Wilbur, Nelson is survived by son, Harold; six grandchildren; nine great-grandchildren; and three brothers, Herbert, Kenneth, and Morris.

Charles Rafferty

Charles L. Rafferty, a resident of Lyngblomsten Care Center, died on September 7. He was 82 years of age.

Rafferty was president of the St. Paul Trades and Labor Assembly and chair of the St. Paul Board of Education. He was a longtime resident of the East Side before moving to Lyngblomsten.

Although he lost his eyesight to disease as a young man, he served in numerous civic organizations and was honored by Governor Wendell Anderson, who declared March 14, 1975, as "Charles Rafferty Day." His wife read all the meeting agendas to him, and he conducted every meeting from memory.

Preceded in death by his wife, Helen, his parents, nine siblings, and a granddaughter, Rafferty is survived by children, Mary Ann Trembley, Lorraine Anderson, James, Joseph, and Lawrence; 14 grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

Valera Simon

Valera E. Simon, resident of Como Park, died on September 6 at 80 years of age. She was a parishioner at Holy Childhood Catholic Church.

Simon is survived by her husband, George Simon; daughters, Mary Simon and Jane Huberty; sister, Irene Rarick; and grandchildren, Nicole, Zachary, Andrew, and Christopher.

If you receive assistance from the Energy Assistance Program, you also can receive a 50 percent electric rate discount on the first 300 kilowatt-hours of electricity you use in each billing period. The discount is available to qualified NSP customers, even if they get most of their heating energy from another utility, or a fuel oil or LP gas supplier.

Don't delay. You must apply for the Assistance Program by May 1, 1998, to be eligible for the 50 percent discount. However, we encourage you to apply as soon as possible.

Don't Miss This Discount

If you have questions about the Energy Assistance Program, please call the Minnesota Department of Economic Security at 1-800-657-3805.

For more information about ways to save money and energy, call NSP at 282-1234.

ElderLearning Institute's classes

ElderLearning Institute at the University of Minnesota is offering 22 discussion topics during its fall quarter. Courses range from the antiquity to the 21st century. Classes meet in a variety of locations throughout the Twin Cities. For information about membership and classes at Steve Benson at 924-7195 or e-mail at bensoneli@aol.com.

Emergency fuel fund

Reach Out for Warmth — Minnesota's emergency fuel assistance for low and moderate-income citizens — is launching its winter community service campaign this fall by visiting area schools.

Family activities and tours

Mark your calendars for the following St. Anthony Park Community Education family activities and tours. First, on Friday, October 10, 6:30 p.m., comes Theater Fun with Steppingstone Theatre, when families learn improvisation skills. Then, on Saturday, October 11, 9 a.m., visit the Animal Farm in Hugo, where participants enjoy a hayride to the pumpkin patch. Also, on Tuesday, October 14, adults can celebrate the autumnal season through taking a Fall Color Tour to Red Wing. For information call 293-8738.

Writing opportunities

The Bugle is looking for quality writers to join our talented, award-winning editorial team. Writers are needed to cover neighborhood government beats plus pen feature articles about people, organizations and places. Here's an opportunity to contribute to your community, while gaining valuable writing experience. Stipend paid. For information please call David Anger at 646-5369. ■

BRIDGE THE GAP

Welfare to Work

- Fact: Welfare Reform requires recipients to work.
- Fact: Many people receiving welfare don't own a car.

- Fact: There are lots of jobs available in the Twin Cities metro area.
- Fact: There is limited or no bus service to many of the available jobs.

Help bridge the gap! Grants are available for organizations and agencies in Ramsey County to implement innovative transportation systems to get County residents on welfare to their jobs.

All grant applicants must attend an information session on 10/8/97, at 8:30 a.m., at Merrick Eastside Comm. Ctr., 1526 E. 6th St., St. Paul.
Application deadline Oct. 30, 1997. Contact: Ramsey County Human Services at 266-4143 for application information.
