Job Corps building plan draws neighborhood reactions

by Dave Healy

The Hubert H. Humphrey Job Corps Center has announced plans to build two new buildings on its campus in the northwest Como Park neighborhood. The new buildings would house a cafeteria and child care center. They would be part of a $4.4 million upgrade of the facilities, which occupy a city block east of Snelling Avenue, west of Arona, north of Arlington and south of Nebraska.

The Job Corps presented its preliminary plan to the neighborhood at a community meeting on June 18. About 85 residents joined the District 10 Como Community Council to learn more about plans for the Job Corps site. Also in attendance were Ward 4 City Councilmember Jay Benanav, Ramsey County Commissioner Janice Rettman and a representative from Rep. Betty McCollum's office.

Job Corps Director of Administration Chris Kuhn explained that current plans call for the two new buildings to be erected on the south end of the campus, where a parking lot is now located. Parking would be relocated across Arlington Avenue, replacing basketball and tennis courts.

"We think we do a pretty good job of maintenance, but we can and will do better."

small to accommodate the Center's 289 students. The child care center would allow students who are single parents to access child care on campus. Currently the Job Corps provides no child care.

The child care program would have space for 40 children and would be managed by an outside company. Kuhn said that if Job Corps students and staff do not use all 40 slots, some might be made available to neighborhood residents.

Urban Tennis in 11th season at Langford

by James Beach

Have an aspiring Albert Costa or Andre Agassi in the family? How about a budding Serena or Venus Williams?

Even if you don't have a Wimbledon champ in the gene pool, chances are excellent that you or one of your kids occasionally picks up a racquet and hits the courts. But where can a player go for inexpensive lessons on adjusting stance, learning a new stroke or brushing up on game rules?

In June, interested youth started practicing topspin, gauging depth and improving their grip, among other things, in St. Paul's Urban Tennis program, now in its 11th season.

The six-week summer session accommodates youth ages 7-18, grouped by age and ability. A child or sibling younger than seven can also participate with parental supervision, though the tykes might have to wait a few years before jumping over the net.

"Two- and three-year-olds can learn to play if they've got the right attitude," says program coordinator John King. "But some kids are better starting later. It all depends on when they tie into the game."

King, who helped start the Urban Tennis program in 1991, has watched it grow from 125 kids at three sites to more than 2,000 participants at 27 locations. Now encompassing much of the St. Paul area, the program continues to expand, even across international boundaries.

"We're planning to trade some players with Japan this summer," says King. "It should

Hanson hits Habitat for Humanity hot seat

by Michelle Christianson

So you think you are a pretty experienced bike rider? Chances are good that you can't hold a candle to St. Anthony Park resident Patty Hanson. After she finishes this year's Habitat 500 ride, Hanson will have ridden 5000 miles to benefit would-be homeowners. And that doesn't include training rides.

Hanson is the only person who has biked every single mile of every Habitat 500 Ride since its inception 10 years ago.

Though she doesn't look down on others who may skip a day for personal reasons or who choose to take the "sag wagon" for part of the day, it's very important to her that she ride every mile. Even last year when she had to miss a day because of her goddaughter's wedding, she made it up, riding with a friend to Eau Claire before the actual ride.

Why would anyone want to bike 500 miles in a week for 10 years running? Hanson says the ride combines "two of my favorite things. I love getting up in the morning and being outside all day. And even when the ride is tough, on a hot, windy day in hilly country, I remember that it's tough for many people—not for a day or a week but for years—as they struggle to have a home. I'll do what I can to give others the joy of coming home to a place of their own."

Growing up in Casper, Wyoming, Hanson shared one bicycle with her three sisters. Even then, she loved the outdoors, spending lots of time exploring the creek near their home. But girls weren't encouraged to be athletic at that time, so the most strenuous activity Hanson did during high school was doing dance routines with the "Pepsters."

She was shocked to see girls playing on a basketball team when she got to Augustana College at Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Even after she graduated with majors in elementary and deaf education, she and her husband, Warren, stayed well within the neighborhood as they explored St. Anthony Park on their bicycles.

All that changed when Hanson read an article in the Bugle about four local women who did the Jim Klobuchar ride, a 500-mile bike ride through northern Minnesota. She and some of her friends thought that they should be able to be strong women, too.

The first ride they did was the seven miles to Como Lake and back. "Well, that's enough!" was Hanson's reaction to that ride. But gradually they added more miles each week, building up to a long ride to Afton and back for a weekend. Over the years, the bikes, clothing and distances changed as they became more serious about riding.

As a teacher, Hanson had seen how debilitating it was for children to move from place to place and what the stability of a permanent home can mean for a child. In 1991 she became the contact person at her church, St. Anthony Park Lutheran, for Habitat for Humanity. She also became involved on the board of Habitat's St. Paul chapter.

Hanson had several volunteer jobs with Habitat (as well as working on houses) before becoming involved with the first Habitat 500 ride. That fit her interests in riding and housing perfectly. The first ride was to Winnipeg, where the riders had a police escort into town and were met by Jimmy Carter. She was hooked.

Asked about good and bad memories of rides, Hanson mostly comes up with good ones. Sure, there were days when it was hot (the ride always takes place in July), and one ride was not very well planned, necessitating last-minute route changes to avoid busy roads. But those times are forgotten when compared with the memories of families getting their own homes for the first time and stories of people running up to the riders to contribute to the cause.

This year's ride (July 14-20) begins in Sartell (near St. Cloud) and stops in Alexandria, Fergus Falls, Detroit Lakes, Park Rapids, Wadena and Little Falls before returning to Sartell. Each rider is required to raise at least $750 and

CITY FILES

Como Park

The 2002 Hmong Soccer Festival will be held July 5 and 6 at McMurray Field and surrounding areas of Como Park. On those days, parking will be restricted on some residential streets in the neighborhood west of Como Park.

Affected streets will be posted by July 2, and residents will receive a letter from the Department of Public Works explaining parking requirements.

On July 16 at 8 p.m., District Councils 6 and 10 will hold a community meeting along with representatives from the city's Public Works and Parks and Recreation departments as well as the Lao family, organizers of the festival. The meeting will provide an opportunity for neighborhood residents to comment on the 2002 soccer festival parking and cleanup efforts. It will be held at the Street Car Museum at the corner of Lexington and Horton.

Reconstruction of East Shore Road along Como Lake was scheduled to begin during the third week of June. During construction the road and bicycle/pedestrian paths will be closed from Wheelock Parkway to Lexington Avenue. Completion is scheduled for the end of October.

Lauderdale

The city of Lauderdale is considering the possibility of installing a sound barrier along Highway 280 between Walnut and Malvern. About 100 property owners will be most directly affected by this decision.

When Lauderdale and Roseville reached an agreement to proceed with the reconstruction of Highway 280, discussions began about whether to erect a sound barrier. A noise study assessed current decibel levels and the noise mitigation effects of three different walls. Measurements were done at 25 points along the site. The study suggested that a 20-foot wall would mitigate most of the sound.

The study results were presented at a Lauderdale neighborhood meeting on April 29 attended by about 40 people. The city next mailed the results of the study and a questionnaire soliciting community response to about 100 property owners who will be most directly affected.

The City Council will be making the final decision at a public meeting in July. Residents should watch the Lauderdale newsletter for the announcement of this meeting.

St. Anthony Park

The District 12 Community Council voted to endorse in principle the concept of transit-oriented development with the following considerations: (1) that communication of any planning or development issues in St. Anthony Park be presented to the Community Council for discussion in a timely manner, (2) that input from the Council be a priority when city or regional planning focuses on St. Anthony Park, and (3) that plans for the neighborhood already in place be respected and considered as well as plans that are developed by the Council during the process.

The full Council voted to re-endorse the permanent traffic changes in south St. Anthony Park recommended by the Cromwell/Bayless Task Force. A letter endorsing the changes will be sent to the Public Works Department, which has agreed to take steps to improve the aesthetics and traffic flow at the Bayless/Bayless Place/Raymond intersection.

Some cutting of the new temporary curb will be done immediately to facilitate turning south onto Raymond, and more adjustments to the intersection will be completed when the permanent changes are put in place. There will be double striping on Raymond and Bayless, a curb along Raymond where Bayless Place originally entered and planters to further visually block the street.

The Community Council is appealing to the City Council to reverse an action of the Planning Commission's Zoning Committee approving a sign variance for 2441 University Avenue.

Negotiating neighborliness

What makes a good neighbor?

People answer that question differently depending on their temperament, needs and circumstances. For some families, good neighbors might be people with children of similar ages. A good neighbor could be one who owns tools you don't have or cooking ingredients you always seem to run out of.

Some people would say that the best neighbors are outgoing, social, gregarious—while others would argue that a neighbor should be seen but not heard.

Who's the more desirable neighbor? The people whose house and yard always look better than yours and thus inspire you to otherwise unattempted heights of home improvement? Or the folks whose less-than-compulsive efforts at maintenance set a more relaxed pace for the neighborhood and make your own modest achievements look better by comparison?

People in the northwest Como Park neighborhood have had occasion to ponder the components of neighborliness lately as they respond to a proposal by the Hubert H. Humphrey Job Corps Center to erect two new buildings on their campus. The Job Corps is not a typical neighbor. Their campus takes up an entire city block. They have 289 students and over 100 full-time staff members.

And yet, at a recent community meeting held to solicit residents' reactions and suggestions regarding the Job Corps' building plans, neighbors leveled some criticisms that would sound familiar to most homeowners: the grass isn't cut, the weeds aren't trimmed, the sidewalks aren't shoveled, the paint is peeling.

On the other hand, meeting attendees had one request that urban dwellers rarely get to make: The new buildings should match existing structures on campus. City building codes place some structural limits on homeowners: building height, setbacks, egress, etc. But when it comes to aesthetic matters, urbanites, unlike some of their suburban counterparts, usually have pretty free reign.

If you live in St. Paul and want to put up a Bauhaus-inspired residence on a block of bungalows or interrupt a string of pastel paint jobs with fire-engine red, there's not much your neighbors can do about it. And they usually wouldn't have any opportunity to comment on your plans until after the deed was done.

What obligations does one have to those one lives near? By opening itself up to suggestions on the appearance of its campus, the Job Corps is subjecting itself to a higher standard of collective aesthetic judgment than most people experience from their neighbors.

Next month represents an invitation for Americans to collectively think about neighborliness as we observe the 19th annual National Night Out. Many will use that event as an opportunity to gather with their most immediate neighbors, sharing food and fellowship. August 6 will be a chance to reflect on the rewards and challenges of urban living as we entertain again a question posed by one of our most popular philosophers: "Won't you be my neighbor?"

The 4th of July

On July 4th I become a real patriot
Oh I enjoy this day a lot.

I sit across from the Bibelot and Watch the St. Anthony parade
Come down Como Avenue.
The antique cars
Draped in stripes and stars
The car from the library
Gives a good feeling to me.

The old folks from the nursing Home in their wheel chairs
Can momentarily get relief from their cares.

The political people making Propaganda for the next election
And the grass mower section.

The little tykes
With their coasters and bikes
Showing off their wear and tear,
All this makes for a village atmosphere.

So on this day in July
I become a real patriot as I watch
The St. Anthony Park parade go by.

August 6 gets neighbors out of the house

by Susan Conner

The 19th National Night Out takes place Tuesday, August 6, but it's not too early to begin planning neighborhood activities to accompany the annual event. National Night Out is promoted across the country as a way to visibly affirm that we want our communities to be safe places by watching out for each other. Many local residents use National Night Out as an opportunity to meet with their neighbors and share food and activities.

In the Como Park neighborhood, the District 10 Community Council will host a gathering at the Pavilion from 6-8 p.m. There will be entertainment, door prizes, crime prevention information, visits from the police and refreshments. In addition, neighbors will be gathering on their own blocks, meeting new faces, greeting old friends and catching up on the news.

In Lauderdale, Mae Schmidt and her neighbors on Ione and Spring will bring snacks and sit together under a pine tree. "There are a lot of new neighbors," she says, "and we want to watch out for each other."

On Raymond Avenue in St. Anthony Park, Ray Bryan and Randy Flacksbarth have organized a get-together for many years. They deliver flyers to the immediate neighborhood, then gather on Randy's front lawn for a potluck dinner. "We catch up with what has happened," says Bryan. "We get to see the older people in the neighborhood because we go get them. Sometimes we have an activity for the kids, but most of the time it's pretty loose. It seems silly that we can't seem to get together at other times. We say we are going to but we never do."

On Scudder Street, between Blake and Knapp, Chris Scholl has been a part of an annual block party/variety show for 21 years. When National Night Out came along, it was a natural fit with the neighborhood event.

Neighbors gather in Scholl's yard for a potluck dinner, a block meeting at which the block captain updates people on relevant issues, and then the renowned variety show. Over the years this show has featured an impressive variety of acts: yoga, dance, jokes, family skits, poems, baton twirling, dog tricks and musical performances.

Neighbors have organized games and scavenger hunts. The evening traditionally ends with a water balloon toss for which they have prepared by readying over 100 water balloons. Richard Hansen inevitably claims victory when he brings out a hose at the end.

The police and fire departments usually make a visit to show the children their vehicles and meet residents. In the spirit of extending the awareness of community, this block also takes a food shelf collection. Children go door to door during the day and gather bags of food, which the block then delivers to the Merriam Park food shelf.

All of this has been duly documented in 21 years of photo scrapbooks, which are especially valued now that children are returning with their children. This annual party now celebrates three generations of neighborliness.

Further north on Knapp Street will be another regular event of many years duration. Wendy Tully has been involved in it for at least five years. These neighbors do a bring-your-own-meat-to-grill potluck. Some years they've had up to 50 people. They, too, invite the fire and police departments to make a visit. The event doesn't require much advance planning. "Last year we actually forgot until almost the last minute," says Tully. "We don't plan activities. We just sit and yak and it's great!"

An annual gathering started about four years ago on Hampden Avenue when Alisa Weber realized on her way home from work that it was National Night Out. She ordered pizza and invited some neighbors, and they all sat out front enjoying the evening. The next year the group used flyers to invite people from around Hampden Park to a potluck in the park.

"I think it's really important to know your neighbors," says Weber. The evening was quite successful and the park so inviting that the next year another block party from Cromwell Avenue brought their tent and joined in.

"I think that it creates a real bond," says Jan Sedgewick from Cromwell. The police and firemen come every year and give the children rides around the park. "It's great," says Vicky O'Duffy. "It's the only time you can really feel happy as you watch your son ride off in the back of a police car."

It is possible to close your street for a block party by submitting a request to the city at least 30 days in advance. Call 292-3525 to request a permit. Your block can arrange a visit from the police or fire department by calling the St. Anthony Park Community Council office at 649-5992.

Several people at the meeting questioned why existing buildings cannot be renovated to house the new facilities.

Currently, two buildings on the campus are vacant. Kuhn said that option had been explored, but it would be more expensive than putting up new buildings.

"Those buildings are old," said Kuhn. "They were built in 1915. There may be some asbestos abatement issues in trying to renovate them."

Kuhn also noted that most of the Job Corps' existing buildings are not ADA compliant, and that the new buildings would be.

Several residents spoke in favor of keeping the present tennis and basketball courts. Richard Lanz, who lives on Asbury Street, said that the courts have not been well maintained in recent years.

Other speakers affirmed the value of that area as a neighborhood resource and expressed the fear that locating a parking lot there would result in declining property values.

Pressed about why the current parking lot needs to be relocated, Kuhn deferred to Sam Ramos, facilities maintenance manager, who said that the Center currently has 92 parking spots, 50 of which would be lost to new construction under the current plan.

A memorandum of agreement between the Job Corps Center and the city of St. Paul, originally signed in 1980 and updated in 1993, calls for the Center "to make its recreational and other facilities available to the community under mutually agreeable conditions."

The memorandum states: "Established off-center tennis and basketball facilities will be maintained in safe and serviceable condition."

It also affirms that "any new structures built on campus will not diminish the total amount of green space currently existing on the campus."

At the community meeting, Rebecca Knittle of Arona Street made three suggestions for the Job Corps to consider: keep the tennis/basketball courts, erect new buildings on the site of existing ones and match the style of the new buildings to that of the remaining buildings.

Knittle asked for a show of hands from the audience, which indicated that a majority of those in attendance agreed with her suggestions.

Kuhn conceded that the amount of money currently allocated by the federal government for updating the St. Paul Job Corps site would not be enough to demolish existing buildings and erect new ones.

However, Councilmember Benanav urged the Job Corps to pursue that option. "Even if the money isn't there now, it may be possible to get it," he said.

Several speakers criticized the Job Corps for not maintaining their campus properly. Benanav said that he had toured the neighborhood earlier in the day with Mayor Kelly, and reported that the mayor was not impressed with the appearance of the campus.

"We think we do a pretty good job of maintenance," responded Kuhn, "but we can and will do better."

Other speakers questioned the process the Job Corps Center has followed. Kuhn was asked who at the federal level is making decisions regarding development of the Center. He said that he had been instructed by his superiors not to provide that information.

Asked why his boss, David MacKenzie, was not at the meeting, Kuhn replied that MacKenzie had business in Washington.

Kuhn emphasized that current plans are still in the preliminary stage. "Nothing is set in stone yet," he said. "We realize we need to have another meeting like this one."

Darryl Pratte, who lives on Arona Street, urged the Job Corps to be more forthcoming in the future. "If there are additional meetings, let's be sure all the principal players are there," he said.

Kuhn was asked what the timeline is for new construction. He replied that a thoroughgoing design review is planned for August.

be a nice cultural exchange."

Operating on a six-figure budget, the nonprofit program allots 90 percent of its money to staff, which mainly consists of high school and college students. The rest goes to providing racquets, balls and open courts for program participants.

Although gear is available for use, more experienced players might want to invest in their own equipment, according to eight-year program veteran Matt Anderson. The Como Park High School student also recommends that newcomers wear comfortable shoes and shorts with deep pockets to hold spare tennis balls.

"But practice is more important than the gear," the 15-year-old adds.

Anderson, who is coaching tennis for the first time this summer, cites watching the younger kids progress as his motivation for teaching.

"I try to give an understanding of all aspects of the game," he says. "But we learn how to have fun, too."

Players learn the basics, such as rules, stance, grip and positioning, as well as some more advanced skills, like alternating between forehand and backhand, placement of the ball behind the service line, and adding power and pace to return shots. The practice sessions also allow for drills, singles and doubles play, and one-on-one coaching.

Hal Holtkamp, recreation director at Langford Park, believes the Urban Tennis program will continue to grow because of its commitment to offering affordable and structured making it to the U.S., Australian or French Open, the more advanced levels of Urban Tennis remain a viable option. But prospective participants should be forewarned. When instructors incorporate calisthenics and nutrition into the schedule, training can last up to five hours a day. According to King, only 3 percent of program participants strive for this level of competitiveness, and practice sessions can be grueling.

That's why most people opt for the regular, one-hour-a-day instruction. But even this amount of effort can produce positive results beyond what can be measured on the courts.

"The Urban Tennis program teaches a living skills package," sums up King. "Kids learn to see how teamwork, setting goals and respecting diversity are all ways that sports connect with life."

With an annual fee of $45 or less, the Urban Tennis program accommodates all children and teenagers with a desire to play. Those interested may call program coordinator John King (222-2879) or Hal Holtkamp at the Langford Recreation Center (298-5765).

summertime activities for those under 18.

"Langford is a popular site," Holtkamp says. "We had nearly 75 kids last year, most from the neighborhood."

Almost as popular as the program regimen is the end-of-season tournament and picnic. Open to all, this year's celebration will be held on July 26th and will feature both semifinals and finals rounds. Medals, food, raffles and prizes, not to mention the possibility of peeks at political figures and other celebrities, should ensure healthy attendance.

Rock-Tenn continues paper recycling tradition

Plant near University and Vandalia has operated since 1908

by Susanne Nevin and Karen Weiblen

On May 22, members of the St. Anthony Park Community Council's Environment and Housing Committee toured the facilities at Rock-Tenn Company to learn more about paper and cardboard recycling. The plant encompasses 42 acres south of University Avenue and west of Vandalia.

The facility has been in operation since 1908, although the oldest building on the premises dates from the 1890s. Over the years, the company has undergone several changes in ownership and name: Hoerner-Waldorf, then Champion, back to Waldorf, and now Rock-Tenn.

Some 670 employees work three shifts for around-the-clock production. In addition, a full-time grounds crew keeps the premises as clean as possible, even during turbulent winds, as on the day of the tour.

Power for the site originates at the NRG High Bridge plant in St. Paul and travels to Rock-Tenn through one of the longest steam lines in the world.

The tour began at the truck scale, where recyclable material is weighed before being dropped off. Rock-Tenn recycles a variety of materials: corrugated containers (cardboard boxes), short fiber mix (mostly newspapers from curbside pickup), box cuttings and office waste.

A front-end loader drops material onto a conveyor belt, which delivers it to two large vats known as hydra-pulpers. For every pound of recycled material, several gallons of water are added to make a slurry. About 1000 tons of products are turned out every day. Water is constantly reclaimed, cleaned and reused.

The next step is to separate the "undesirables" from the "desirables." High-density cleaners churn up the fiber with warm water. The spinning motion sorts out heavier metal such as paper clips and box clamps. Combi-sorters remove lighter styrofoam, strapping tape, etc. Then the water and fiber mix is forced through drums with fine screens. The final weight of the mixture is 4 percent fiber and 96 percent water.

The water-and-fiber mixture is pumped into four different paper machines. Two produce clay-coated paperboard, while two other machines produce corrugating medium (the fluted part of a cardboard box).

The water-fiber slurry is then run through a press until the fiber-water ratio equals 50:50. The resulting pulp is dried at 230-280°. This process is what produces the steam that becomes visible to passers-by in winter. Not to worry—it's only water vapor.

Some material is given a white clay coating and then cut into sheets for sheet-fed printing presses. In the quality control booth, where the humidity is kept at 52 percent and the temperature at 72°, computerized machines perform curl and stiffness tests.

Rock-Tenn has three printing presses (two web, one rotogravure) in another building that prepare final products, including the packaging material for Puffs tissue, a product of the Procter & Gamble Company, for whom Rock-Tenn is the primary supplier.

Rock-Tenn's regional manager of recycling, Tom Troskey, pointed out that paperboard recycling is a competitive business driven by supply and demand.

"Today, many consumers in the United States prefer plastic packaging over paper packaging," Troskey said.

As an example, he mentioned the laundry detergent section in a grocery store, where recycled paperboard boxes take up only a small percentage of shelf space.

Companies like Rock-Tenn need a steady supply of recyclable paper material—the cleaner, the better.

"The next time you need detergent, reach for that recycled paperboard package rather than the plastic bottle," urged Troskey. "And before you place your recyclables out on the curb, remove those paper clips and that styrofoam and strapping tape and all other nonpaper items."

Troskey also noted that some containers are considered "undesirable"—including beverage carrier packaging and packaging used in refrigerated and frozen foods (these are difficult to repulp), as well as pizza boxes with food contamination such as cheese and grease.

Residents who miss the biweekly curbside pickup can take paper and cardboard directly to Rock-Tenn's drop-off site: a white dumpster on Myrtle Avenue, accessible via Hampden.

Summer program mixes books and bugs

by Lisa Steinmann

"Spiders and bees and butterflies—OH MY!" was the theme of the Summer 2002 Bookstart program during June.

Four-six-year-old participants mixed books with bugs when they got together Monday-Thursday from 9-10:30 a.m. at South St. Anthony Recreation Center, 890 Cromwell Avenue.

Session I ran June 17-27. Session II, featuring world folk tales, will run July 8-18. The recreation center offers an extra hour of gym games Monday-Thursday, 10:30-11:30 a.m. at no additional cost for Bookstart participants.

This summer's Bookstart activities are being led by Nancy Shellum and Lisa Arcand.

Shellum worked with the program last summer and is the mother of three children who have all attended Bookstart. During the school year she works at St. Anthony Park United Methodist Church Nursery

Shellum and Arcand have planned crafts and other activities designed to bring out the fun in books.

Shellum offers an example: "We'll read a book about worms and then eat candy worms for a snack. I think the biggest part is that kids have fun while sharing a love of books and making friends."

Lisa Arcand, a resident of the Como Park neighborhood, is new to the Bookstart program. However, she brings lots of experience to this young age group as a parent and kindergarten teacher with the St. Paul Public Schools.

Arcand values the opportunity Bookstart offers children "to expand their imagination and get more self-motivated about books. It's important for kids to come together over books. It helps them build confidence in their relationships."

Shellum agrees. Although Bookstart does provide children with important practice in listening skills and group behavior, like taking turns and sharing, it is a summer program with an emphasis on fun and friendship.

"When kids read books together, versus when an adult and a child read a book together, the kids feed off each other," says Shellum.

She is looking forward to an interesting discussion when she reads "Hey Little Ant," in which a child is about to step on an ant. The illustration on the last page shows a child's foot poised in the air. The last sentence reads, "What would you do?" Is there a right answer? Shellum shakes her head and smiles. "Kids talking about a book together is just amazing."

For more information about the Bookstart program, call St. Paul Community Education at 325-2672.

is allowed to select which Habitat affiliate will receive the money they raise. Hansen hopes to raise $5000—one dollar for each mile she will have ridden.

Habitat sees to it that 95 percent of the money from the ride goes directly to affiliates, with only 5 percent dedicated for ride costs. Last year, the Habitat 500 raised over $250,000 that went directly toward homebuilding in Minnesota, 11 other states, Ireland, Romania, Guatemala and Kenya.

This year, Habitat for Humanity will finish its 750th home in Minnesota, housing almost 4,000 people. Each year approximately 20,000 people volunteer in Minnesota alone, including skilled craftsmen, individuals, churches and businesses.

Homebuyers are selected based on need for shelter, ability to repay the no-interest loan and willingness to participate in Habitat's partnership program. In Minnesota, homebuyers are required to donate 300-500 hours of "sweat equity" before they can move into a Habitat house. This makes foreclosures on houses extremely rare.

The only thing Hansen hates to do in connection with this ride is ask for money. But because of her $5000 goal she needs more donors than ever. If you would like to contribute to this cause, send checks made out to Habitat for Humanity to: 1380 Raymond Ave., St. Paul MN 55108. Someone, somewhere will come that much closer to having a place to call home.

Muffuletta

by Natalie Zett

Muffuletta's executive chef Dave Robinson didn't start out in the restaurant business. "Mine was a mid-life career change," said Robinson, who lives in northeast Minneapolis and has been at Muffuletta for five years.

Ten years ago, Robinson was working in the circulation department at the St. Paul Pioneer Press, which was being downsized. He decided to use his severance pay to pursue an interest in cooking. But after one quarter at a local technical college, he found himself disillusioned with the program.

Robinson expressed his disenchantment to a teacher, who advised him to get a job in a restaurant to gain the experience he needed. He promptly began working at Kincaid's, where he had a valuable apprenticeship learning about the restaurant business from the ground floor up.

After that, Robinson did stints at Morton's Steak House and at Byerly's, where he was a line cook. While working at Byerly's, a headhunter approached him about working at Muffuletta.

Ironically, he had interviewed at Muffuletta once before. Although he didn't get the job the first time, the women interviewing him spent 45 minutes offering all sorts of guidance about the business.

"It was a matter of time, I guess, since I have quite a history with this place," laughed Robinson. "Before it was Muffuletta, it was the Lamplighter Restaurant, where I frequently used to have breakfast."

Later, it became a place where he and his friends brought their dates. So it was no surprise that Robinson ended up back at this location. "I've come full circle and I love it. It's a great job," he said.

Located in "downtown" St. Anthony Park, Muffuletta is a bustling place with a large dining area of booths, tables and chairs and a popular outdoor seating area.

Self-taught chefs tempt

"Muffuletta is owned by Parasole Restaurant Holdings, which also owns the Good Earth, Figlio's and Manny's Steak House," explained Robinson. "Each place uses different concepts, though. There's a lot of freedom at Muffuletta and we change our menu frequently. The sky's the limit. There is no corporate cookbook, as there often is in other restaurants. There you are confined to a library of recipes. Here, it's a blank slate. I tell people to try things—and we have incredibly creative, talented chefs who are more than able to do that."

The key for this kind of success, according to Robinson, is a combination of teamwork within the restaurant and making sure that the guests feel ownership for the restaurant.

—Executive chef Dave Robinson

Muffuletta employs about 20 waitstaff and a dozen cooks. "We're very much a team," said Robinson. "I've worked in places where there was a real disparity between the front staff (the hosts and waiters) and the back staff (the cooks, chefs and dishwashers). That's not the case here. People also are here for the long term. We have a cook who has been here for seven years, and that's longer than I've been here."

Although Robinson learned on the job, he welcomes professionally trained chefs. In fact, Muffuletta boasts culinary school graduates from the Arizona Culinary Institute in Scottsdale, Johnson and Wales Culinary School, Le Cordon Bleu (Brown Institute, Minneapolis) and the Culinary Institute of America.

Part of Robinson's day also involves the nuts-and-bolts operations of the restaurant: scheduling staff, ordering food and supplies, and repairing appliances. When he's in the kitchen, though, one of his favorite dishes to prepare is fish.

"I love fish for the texture, the colors and the presentation," he said. "It's a great palette to work from." For Robinson, preparing a dish is akin to prepping a canvas for a painting—very much an artistic endeavor that involves all of the senses.

"I see dishes conceptually," he said. "I try to rely on my intuition to guide me in putting things together. I find when I do that, it just works. I love serving people. Eating together is so basic. It's about people coming into dine, enjoying themselves, sharing food. We like to add to that experience that brings people together and that creates and builds relationships."

Robinson also knows that maintaining a popular restaurant takes hard work. "We got a bad review once a while back, and it hurt. We took it really seriously and made the changes the reviewer suggested. Well, in February the reviewer came back and said she loved it, so it really do want to take feedback seriously."

In his spare time, Robinson is spending time with his wife and two children. He is also a dad. Robinson teaches classes in the park and makes appearances to

Phillips, owner and chief cook at Chet's Taverna, came to his livelihood circuitously.
A Russian studies major at Hamline
University and a performing musician, Phillips has been in the restaurant business for 10 years. He began working at Walker Art Center's restaurant, starting as a dishwasher and then moving up through the ranks.

"As a dishwasher, I would ask the chefs questions about ingredients or how to cook

Phillips's interest, began taking him under northeast Minneapolis.

In fact, Chet's was born out of a joint venture with the Modern's owners.

Phillips noted that there is no "Chet."
That name was the alter ego of a former owner. Chet's and the Modern split amicably a few years ago. Phillips and his wife, Michelle, who trains the waitstaff, are Chet's sole owners.

Phillips has been at Chet's for four years and continues the apprenticeship tradition with his own staff. Among the people he's currently mentoring is a 19-year-old dishwasher. "He has a really great work ethic and an interest in the business," said Phillips. "And we are always looking for good workers."

Besides cooking and mentoring, Phillips spends his days in diverse tasks such as ordering food and supplies, scheduling workers and tasting wine (someone has to do it!).

Phillips, who hails from a small town in Iowa, grew up around farmers and now makes a point of buying from local farms whenever possible. In fact, their menu reads: "Chet's tries to use organic ingredients and supports local and regional sustainable agriculture."

At first glance, Chet's, a small storefront, simply decorated with about 20 tables, brings to mind a neighborhood meat-and-potatoes kind of place. Indeed, that's what it is, but the meat may be duck from the local Wild Acres Game Farm or pan-roasted pork from the Four Winds Organic Farm, with "a gratin of new potato" or "fingerling potato ramps."

"It's a smaller place, that's true," said Phillips. "But the guests seem to enjoy the intimacy and we like it, too." Despite its popularity, Phillips has no plans right now to expand.

The biggest challenge is characterizing the menu. Although Chet's Taverna suggests something Greek or Middle Eastern, the staples are eclectic.

"Our menu changes all the time," said
Phillips. "We use whatever is in season."
Now, in fact, is the best time to pay a visit.
"In the summer, particularly, we have this gorgeous produce and we are always finding new ways to use it."

Phillips, who lives in Minneapolis with his wife and two young sons, ages 10 months and 3 years, pauses momentarily to reflect on his life. "I put in 60-hour weeks, but that's less than I used to work, and besides, I love St. Anthony Park. The people are tremendous and I love doing this."

Abu Nader

by Amy Causton

The next time you have a hankering for some authentic Middle Eastern food, you don't have to hop on a plane. For people who enjoy a taste of the exotic, Abu Nader Deli's Izabelle Ailabouni cooks up a variety of dishes to tempt the palate.

The deli, located at 2095 Como Avenue, is owned by Ailabouni and her husband, Bishara. The Ailabounis have lived in St. Paul for 23 years, including a five-year stint in St. Anthony Park in the mid-80s. Currently, they reside in the Como Park area.

It was 23 years ago when they first leased the space at the corner of Como and Raymond Avenues, where they ran a store for several years. In 1999, after the space had been vacant for some time, they decided to buy the building and open a new store and deli. As for the name, "Abu" means "father" and Nader is the name of the Ailabounis' first-born son. Naming the store this way follows an old Arab tradition.

Izabelle Ailabouni learned to cook as a young girl in Israel. "Growing up, I watched my mom cook," she says. "I learned from her." She had never cooked professionally before they opened the deli two years ago, but it was certainly something she enjoyed. "I love to cook, and I love to feed people," she says.

Among the dishes she prepares six days a week are traditional Middle Eastern favorites such as tabuleh, humus, baba ghanouge and falafel, as well as her baklava, which the St. Paul Pioneer Press last year named the best in the Twin Cities.

Buckthorn busting supplement

by Mary Maguire Lerman

Enclosed in this month's Bugle is a helpful four-color "Guide to Buckthorn Busting," which was assembled by the Friends of the Parks through a grant from the Environment and Natural Resources Trust Fund, as recommended by the Legislative Commission on Minnesota Resources (your lottery money at work for the environment).

This guide will be of great use to property owners because it has a four-color photo of the most pervasive form of buckthorn—Common Buckthorn. Glossy Buckthorn should also be removed from landscapes.

There are a few items mentioned in this guide that I want to discuss further.

Section 3 explains how to treat cut stumps and recommends the herbicide Brush-B-Gon. While this is an effective herbicide, it can be a respiratory irritant to some users. It also has the potential for leaching into the soil and damaging the roots of desirable plant materials if not properly applied.

Instead, I would recommend the use of Roundup in the new "stronger" formulation that has 25 percent glyphosate. This is the exact strength of Roundup—no dilution required—that will be effective on cut stumps. There is no soil leaching with this product, and I have not found it to be an irritant.

Either product should be available at most hardware or garden stores. Either product must be applied to the cut stump within 24 hours of cutting.

Section 4 lists two ways to dispose of buckthorn branches. In our neighborhood there is a third option for disposal of branches. The St. Anthony Park Garden Club and the St. Anthony Park Association are committed to partially funding private property pickup of buckthorn.

This fall will be the third year the Buckthorn Roundup will occur. Watch for further information in the August and September issues of the Bugle.

This year a $1,000 grant from the USDA Forest Service to St. Paul Parks and Recreation will assist with these removal efforts in another way.

In September a complete survey of our neighborhood will be done by trained volunteers, including master gardeners.

These volunteers will walk the public sidewalks and alleys and look at individual properties.

If they spot buckthorn on your property, a flyer will be left on your door explaining how you can participate at a very low cost in having your buckthorn picked up in October.

If your property is not visible, the flyer will explain how to make an appointment for a personal yard visit by a buckthorn volunteer.

This survey program was very successful last year in the Prospect Park, Linden Hills and Fulton neighborhoods in Minneapolis. Additional Minneapolis neighborhoods will be surveyed this fall.

We need additional volunteers to help with this survey this fall. If you are interested in participating and attending the mandatory training (a two-hour intensive workshop), call Mary (644-7388) or Ron (647-0262).

Help us clear our community of this pest and preserve our parklands for future generations to enjoy.

as well as creating some of her own dishes, like a rice dish with ground beef and pine nuts, and a cracked wheat and lentil dish, both of which she says she can never keep in stock.

But she doesn't have a favorite among the many dishes she prepares. "I enjoy cooking everything," she says. "It's kind of relaxing to me." She also likes the social aspect of her work. "I like to talk to the customers; I enjoy the people around here."

Remarkably, cooking is Ailabouni's second job. She's at the deli from about 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., then works the second shift as a pharmacist for Regions Hospital, as well as occasionally at Cub Pharmacy.

But clearly, for Ailabouni cooking is a passion. She emphasizes the use of only good olive oil and the best and freshest ingredients in her cooking. "I cook for the deli exactly as I would cook at home," she says. "If I don't eat it, I won't serve it to our customers."

Abu Nader Deli is open 11 a.m.-9 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Aging Gracefully by Mary Jo Taras

Is anyone ever prepared for death? For that matter, how many people are prepared for life? Is there a connection between the two? I think there is.

In 1996, my five-year-old son was in an accident. He spent several days in a coma, but it was clear that he would never recover, so we made a decision to disconnect the machinery that was keeping him alive.

He was a minor with a parent who could make this decision, but I have often wondered, "What if I'd been in the accident with him?" At that time, I had not prepared myself legally for my own death.

There are four things we can all do to prepare for death. It is silly to ignore them, because as soon as we are born, we are guaranteed that we will die someday. Yet many people avoid these preparations, as if ignoring them will keep death away.

Do Not Resuscitate

A Do Not Resuscitate Order must be signed by your physician and on file with your medical records to be official. This document will keep you from being hooked up to machines when all possibility of consciousness is gone. If you haven't already talked to your medical provider about preparing this document, do so as soon as you can.

Your Will

You can consult an attorney or you can find forms to write your will yourself at stores or Web sites that sell legal forms.

Most people think of a will only in terms of their estate, but there are other, more important things a will can specify. In addition to sparing those you leave behind the confusion of dividing your estate, a will can ensure that arrangements made when you die are carried out according to your wishes.

When my son died, I wanted to celebrate the miracle of his life rather than only mourn his death. I felt that a 5-year miracle was just as amazing as an 80-year miracle, so I arranged a memorial. The people who loved him shared stories about him and planted a garden to honor him.

My will instructs that any usable part of my body be donated to others, that my remains be cremated and that a celebration of my life be arranged rather than a traditional funeral. Without a will, I would have no assurance that these things would be done.

Donor Status

I can think of no better way to give meaning to your death than to specify that any usable part of your physical remains be made available to help others. I recommend this to anyone whose spiritual beliefs do not forbid it.

Donor status can be easily arranged by checking the proper box on your driver license or state identification card, but it should also be included in your medical records. Because of my son's physical deterioration after his accident, he was not eligible to donate an organ to another person. However, some of his body tissue was donated for research to help others who might someday be in the same situation.

Meaningful Life

Just before my son's accident, he asked me to read him a book we had not yet read, and I said I was too busy. That response haunts me still. And this, of course, is the final way we can prepare for death: by living our lives as meaningfully as we can.

Is there something you've always wanted to do that you've put off? Do it! Is there someone you've had an argument with that you aren't speaking to? Call and apologize—even if they're in the wrong! Stop and smell the roses. Live life to the fullest each day. Then, when death does come to you, you will have no regrets.

As always, if you have ideas for topics we could cover, please contact the St. Anthony Park Block Nurse Program at 642-9052 or sapbnp@bitstream.net.

He was born August 27, 1928 to Clarence and Inga Stormo Lee. He attended Guttarsen Grade School and Murray High School, graduating in 1946. Known as the class story-teller, he continued in that role at class reunions every five years. He played football, hockey and baseball all through high school and at Gustavus Adolphus College. husband and three young children, she escaped from East Germany in 1956, and was sponsored by the Roseville Lutheran Church.

Another son was born after their arrival. In 1961, her husband died of brain cancer. Mrs. Miesner, with no job training and a minimal command of English, worked at any available job to provide for her children. She was helped to become an American citizen by her daughter, Linde, who at age 12 coached her mother every day until she was able to pass the citizenship exam.

Several years ago, a local radio-television station held a contest to grant the winner a wish. She won second place with her letter wishing to visit her family in Germany. After her letter was read over the radio, the station was deluged with calls demanding that "the German lady" get her wish. The station sent her for her visit, and thereafter she was known as "the German lady." She was a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Survivors include her daughter, Linde, of Bemidji; three sons, Tom (Pat) of Stacy, Rowland (Loni) of St. Paul and Olaf (Gina) of Andover; six grandchildren; ten great-grandchildren; two sisters, Erna of Germany and Hilla of England; and a brother, Alfred (Elsbeth) of Germany.
