Changes afoot for St. Anthony Park bookstores

Minnesota Women's Press to close its bookstore Micaewher's will reopen under new management

by Dave Healy

Anyone doubting that there are tough times for small independent bookstores need look no farther than St. Anthony Park, where two bookstores are closing. Both Micaewher's at 2238 Carter Avenue and the bookstore at Minnesota Women's Press, 771 Raymond Avenue, will close at the end of June.

However, lovers of reading need not despair. Micaewher's will reopen August 1 under new ownership, and Minnesota Women's Press will continue to support a variety of reading activities, groups and publications that have long been part of the organization's mission, which founding publisher Mollie Hoben described as "building community and extending a transformative feminist world view."

Hoben characterized the decision to close their bookstore as a concession to market forces that have imperiled independent bookstores everywhere. "It's a difficult time for book selling," she said. "Retailing is different from anything else we do, and we finally decided that we don't have the resources to do the job as well as we'd like. We want to focus our energies on what we do best."

In contrast, St. Anthony Park announced recently that it will participate in a new loan program targeted to small businesses. The Small Business Expansion Program (SBEP) uses partnerships between community banks and the Community Reinvestment Fund to tap private sources of capital that new businesses can use to supplement city loans and other funding sources.

One of the most daunting tasks facing someone who wants to expand a small business is getting financing. "The Small Business Expansion Program is another powerful and flexible tool for community banks to have in their tool box to help get financing to small businesses that otherwise might not qualify for conventional financing," said Rick Beeson, St. Anthony Park Bank president.

According to Beeson, St. Anthony Park Bank has a reputation for helping small businesses thrive. "One way we've achieved that reputation," he said, "is by partnering with community banks and offering them the flexibility to make loans to small businesses that they might not otherwise make."

St. Anthony Park considered for commercial-industrial development

District 12 Community Council member Sberrn Eagles will chair local task force

by Dave Healy

If you want to sell an urban development project these days, you need to know the buzz words: mixed use, smart growth, the new urbanism. These terms share several assumptions: that urban sprawl should be checked; that people want to be able to walk, work and recreate close to where they live; that segregating residential and retail areas is less effective than combining them. But in the mixed-use triangle—housing, retail, industry—one leg usually ends up shortest: the industrial one.

Several trends have conspired to squeeze industry out of the urban development picture. For one thing, a changing global economy has resulted in a vastly reduced manufacturing sector throughout the United States. St. Paul's Midway area, for example, lost about 2,400 manufacturing jobs between 1993 and 2002, according to a study by University UNITEDED.

Another trend evident in the Twin Cities has been increasing...

The grand opening of the new North Dale Recreation Center will be held on July 12 from 1-3 p.m. at 1414 N. St. Albans. There will be activities and displays of interest to all. This new recreation center is the result of a long-term dream, commitment and years of effort on the part of the community. Come and participate in a well-deserved celebration.

Falcon Heights
Development is proceeding at the southeast corner of Larpenteur and Snelling Avenues. The most recent public meeting showed strong support for the plans from about 50 residents. Plans include multifamily apartments, senior apartments and townhomes. The Metropolitan Council has awarded Falcon Heights a grant of $5,000,000 to support home ownership elements of the development.

Businesses on the corner have now closed. Those with ongoing leases were assisted by the developer as they relocated. Dino’s Gyro will remain open throughout the development and will eventually move across Larpenteur to the northeast corner of the intersection (the previous site of Bench). That construction is scheduled to begin July 10. The new Dino’s will be more than twice the size of the current restaurant, providing seating for 108 diners. The goal is to be completed and occupied by mid-October.

Sharp-eyed observers have noticed a family of foxes living in the city (two adults and seven kits). Residents who let their cats out should be aware.

Leaundale
The annual Day In The Park will be held on July 12 at Lauderdale Community Park from 4-8 p.m. Events begin with a parade at 4 p.m. Families, children and Lauderdale-based community groups and clubs are invited to dress up, decorate their bikes, carry a banner or sign and march in the parade. After the parade there will be music, food, games and good fun for the entire family.

The Community Council agreed to support a STAR grant request by University Enterprise Laboratory to help purchase and renovate an existing facility at 1000 Westgate Drive in St. Paul. The building will be converted into a collaborative research center with about 132,000 sq. ft. of usable space.

An edited version of the community forum held May 6 featuring David Lannom’s presentation of the St. Anthony Park community profile will be shown on channel 19, St. Paul’s Neighborhood Network (SPNN). The broadcast schedule is:

Shop owner's résumé includes guns and roses
by Judy Woodward

Plenty of people do a mid-career shift and exchange one way of making a living for something quite different. Few manage to bridge the professional extremes that Isabel Wallace, owner of the new Milton Square boutique, Antique Garden, has done.

Antique Garden, a potpourri of fresh flowers and garden-themed collectibles, is the kind of charming space where the music of classic French chansons Edith Piaf can be heard in the background and the owner's pet canary, pussy fish and lop-eared, buff-colored rabbit are very much part of the foreground.

"It's the shop, you might say, of a slightly off-beat, wholly original being who has decided to share her unique good taste with the lucky shoppers of St. Anthony Park. Say that, and you wouldn't be wrong. What isn't immediately clear from the surroundings, though, is that Antique Garden is also the headquarters for a hard-charging, former sheriff's deputy, a woman who found the perks of ordinary law enforcement so routine that she opted to join the permanently adrenaline-drenched environment of the SWAT team in order to keep herself on top form.

For 15 years, Wallace worked for the Ramsey County Sheriff's Office. For several of those years, she was the first and—almost the only female member of the Sheriff's Emergency Response Team. The SERT, as it's called, is likely to be first on the scene in the most dangerous, uncertain and harrowing of all police incidents.

Wallace remembers the high-tension drama of episodes like the one in August 1994, when she was part of the team called to the scene to find a killer who had just gunned down two St. Paul policemen and their K-9 partner.

She had joined the sheriff's department as an athletic 21-year-old who was looking for a challenge. "I knew law enforcement was really demanding and physically challenging, I wanted something that would test me," is how she puts it.

Wallace says she loved her years in law enforcement, but she admits that she wasn't exactly Mr. Everycrop. Away from work, Wallace, like her colleagues, enjoyed vigorous outdoor recreation. For most cops that might mean hunting or fishing. Wallace, on the other hand, would head straight for the garden after work. "I've been actively gardening," she says, "for about 20 years, ever since I purchased my first house."

Wallace has been a certified master gardener in Hennepin County for almost a decade. For the last seven or eight years, she's eclectic, vintage collectibles she wanted to sell, mixed in among fresh flowers and plants. Antique Garden opened in February.

As the warm weather arrived this spring, Wallace began to move more and more of the plants outside. Now they spill in colorful profusion down the steps of the store's entrance, leaving more room inside for the antique furniture and china, the framed garden prints, the original oils and the vintage garden implements.

Wallace says the selection criteria for her wares are simple. "They're things that I feel are beautiful. I rarely sell things I don't like personally. My goal is to create a comfortable atmosphere to offer things that are unique and very affordable."

An observer might note that everything in the store—from the green glass antique cake plates to the botanical prints to the miniature topiary plants to the bright-yellow store canopy—would look very nice in an old-fashioned sun room.

Wallace is ready to put her gardening expertise at her customers' service. Ask her how to make those beautiful cut flowers last, and she's full of good advice. Use a vase so clean you could drink out of it, she counsels, add cool water and bypass those little packets of plant-extender chemicals in favor of a drop of bleach added to the vase.

Want a unique, beautiful and unlike everything else you own? How about a lemon-rose-scented geranium? It's beautiful and good, and, if that isn't enough, it's completely edible. Brew it in tea, flavor a cake with its aroma—whatever you do, it's a far cry from life on the SERT.

It is, however, a prime example of Wallace's current professional goals in action. "I want," she says, "to bring the garden indoors."

Kelly Wallace takes a breather in front of Antique Garden.

also volunteered as a community gardener at Saint Joseph's Home for Children in south Minneapolis. It's part of a program, she says, "to give people the opportunity to beauty urban spaces."

Wallace might have remained the cop with the green thumbs forever had not a serious auto accident sidelined her about six years ago. She was forced to take medical retirement at the ripe old age of 35.

"I rarely sell things I don't like personally. My goal is to create a comfortable atmosphere to offer things that are unique and very affordable."

"Physically, I could no longer do the one-on-one apprehending," she explains. "I didn't want to leave, but I wasn't really sure of the next stage."

Gradually, she began to look around for ways to build on her gardening expertise. After several years in a retail partnership elsewhere the Twin Cities, Wallace decided it was time to strike out on her own. Milton Square seemed to offer the perfect setting for the kind of Americans love a good fight. Our games, our politics, our economic system—all are based on competition, which is essentially sanctioned violence. People love to pick and choose the favorites, others the underdog. But we wouldn't have the choice without a fight. Seeing the world in competitive terms necessitates clearly defined combatants: theTwins vs. theRoyals, Kelly vs. Benatar. Coke vs. Pepsi. But when the fight threatens an issue that has no real combatants, others than the opposition, abstract, amorphous. What does it mean, for example, to declare war on drugs? Or terrorism? Who or what precisely is the enemy?

Winners and losers

Our need to concretize the opposition is evident in most action movies. Film critics may be content to talk about the conflict of good vs. evil, but most viewers want something more specific: the good guys vs. the bad guys, preferably, the lone hero vs. the villain. Even a panaromic blockbuster about world domination usually comes down to two guys going at it hand-to-hand.

In the geopolitical real, we need villains too—someone's picture to throw darts at: an Ocmans bin Laden, a Saddam Hussein. Acustomed as we are to having the opposition personalized, we probably won't take threats posed by an Iran or a North Korea seriously. We'd have to face an actual enemy or react on that.

Closer to home, book lovers are prone to frame the plight of local bookstores as a battle between independents and chains. For many Bugle readers, the local independents are represented by Mickey's and the bookstore operated by Minnesota Women's Press, both St. Anthony Park institutions that will close at the end of June. And who's in the other corner? The chains, of course. Especially Barnes and Noble, with two suburban locations just minutes away.

Certainly the book selling business is competitive, and clearly chains pose a threat to independents—even if Barnes and Noble has no obvious knighthood to send up against Mickeys owner Norm Stillman, which is what the movie version of this drama would require. But Mickeys and Barnes and Noble may both face another foe that is even more amorphous.

Why go to a bookstore at all these days? Why not just log on, fill your virtual shopping basket and wait for your books to arrive in the mail? After all, why should we wield our votes be constrained by geographical happenstance? It shouldn't matter whether one lives near a book or a book store editor. Ultimately, we're trafficking in ideas here anyway. Right? Plus, if amazon.com doesn't have it, it's probably not worth reading.

But what if you don't know which book you want? What if you want to wander around a bit and see what jumps off the shelf? Pick up a volume and flip through it? Ask the person at the counter if she's read this one and what she thought of it.

If we're not even sure we have a reason to lament the demise of the Women's Press bookstore and to cheer the news that Mickeys will reopen in August under new management. And you have reason to hope that in the battle to deliver the printed page, there will be no losers.

New plants on Raymond Ave.

We would like to thank the St. Anthony Park Garden Club for their generosity in providing the plants used in the large blue pots on the sidewalk on Raymond Ave., across from the Hampden Park Co-op, as well as pots near the South St. Anthony Rec Center playground.

The Garden Club has been very supportive of our efforts to make St. Anthony Park inviting and hospitable. Thanks also to Noll Hardware for their help in supplying paint at a low cost.

Pie/ice cream social a success

On behalf of the Northern Light 4-H Club, I would like to thank the community for their wonderful support of our pie and ice cream social on June 6.

Several patrons of new members were in awe of the wonderful sense of community they witnessed.

We would like to thank the St. Anthony Park Community Band for providing the music, St. Anthony Park Bank for allowing us to use their property, Ginkgo's for supplying the coffee, and St. Anthony Park Lutheran Church and Lauderdale City Hall for the use of tables and chairs.

Proceeds from the event will be used to support educational activities for youth members as well as for community activities. For example, last year we made blankens for Children's Home Society crisis nurseries and provided homemade cookies for the dedication committee from St. Anthony Park House.

Thank you, St. Anthony Park, for supporting our youth.

Butterfly garden flourishes

We want to thank everyone who participated in the Garden Club's recent fundraiser by purchasing Easter lilies, hydrangeas and other potted plants. The event raised $325 for the St. Anthony Park Butterfly Garden project. The money will be used to purchase plants for the area, which is just west of the Community Garden plots on Robbins.

Most of the existing plants appear to have survived the winter and the rabbits. The new planting will be done early this summer. Do walk by and watch the progress. The unplanted area will still be vast, but this gift will go a long way toward filling it in with native plants and grasses.

Former Congressman Erdahl to appear at peace pole

On June 30 St. Anthony Park Neighbors for Peace will sponsor a complimentary potluck and talk by former U.S. Rep. Ardell Erdahl. The event takes place at St. Anthony Park United Church of Christ, 2129 Commonwealth Ave.

The potluck starts at 6:30 p.m. Attendees should bring a dish to share as well as plates, cups and utensils. Beverages will be provided. Child care will be available for children 10 and under.

Erdahl's talk will begin at 7 p.m. His topic is "The United Nations in a Unitarian World."

Erdahl formerly served as the Minnesota House of Representa tives, as Minnesota's secretary of state and in the U.S. House of Representatives. He has led boards of the United Nations Association of Minnesota and the local People to People chapter. He received the 1999 Twin Cities International Citizens Award.

Publications receive newsletters that come out six times a year. It features profiles of readers and writers, short reviews and reviews of book-related events. "Great Books" is a column that includes announcements of the greatest hits from a dozen active book clubs that meet monthly at the Women's Press building on Raymond. The second edition, covering 1986-2002, will come out this month.

Hoben expressed sadness about the decision to close the bookstore. "It's a wonderful feeling to walk in the door and be surrounded by books."

"When we opened our store, there were over a hundred feminist bookstores across the country. Now there are only a few left."

At Mickeys in Milton Square, owner Norton Stillman has sold the store to Parkers and has plans to sell it to the owners of 31 years to two former employees of Ruminator Books in St. Paul, Todd Bixler and Hanks Weynand. The new owners will keep the name Mickeys and many of the store's fixtures. They have signed a lease with Milton Investment Co. for the space.

Stillman hopes to sell most of the store's inventory. To that, Mickeys marked down all its books 50-75 percent. "I wanted to reduce the inventory so that we could make the price of the store more affordable," Stillman said.

Putting a bookstore up for sale isn't that complicated, said Stillman. "The bookstore is a small community," he noted. "I just talked to a few people I know, and they talked to some other people. Eventually I was contacted by Hans and Tom." Stillman said he's pleased that someone who knows books is buying his store. He's sanguine about the prospects for independent bookstores if they offer something different from the large chains. It's especially important, he believes, to have a good staff.

"All the time I've owned Mickeys, Mickeys has been involved in other aspects of the book business as well," he said. "Not being at the store all the time meant that I had to depend on my staff. Fortunately, I've had many wonderful people who worked for me over the years."

Stillman has been a book wholesaler, publisher and bookbinder owner over the years. He and co-owner Ned Waldman sold their book wholesale business, Bookman, a year ago. With the sale of the Mickeys, Stillman will be free to concentrate on publishing. He'll miss being at the store, however. "I loved merchandising," he said. "Moving books to a different spot in the store, trying to make attractive displays—the kind of thing I'll miss." Mickeys is named after a Charles Dickens character. At the end of "David Copperfield," Mr. Mickeys, known for his business enthusiasm but not his financial success, emigrates to Australia, where he becomes a magistrate.

Eight years ago, Norton Stillman bought some land in New Zealand. He's planning to spend a lot more time there now. So the man who has been "Mr. Mickeys" for 31 years will take a page from his store's namesake when he winters in the land down under.

"Mr. Mickeys wasn't always the most practical man, but he had a lot of enthusiasm," said Stillman. "I hope people will say the same of me."
On June 9 about 40 neighbors gathered at College Park in St. Anthony Park to celebrate the new playground and tennis/basketball courts that were completed last August. On hand for the ceremony were Suzanne Garfield of the St. Anthony Park Community Council, Ward 4 City Council Member Jay Benanor and College Park neighbor Bob Munson, who spearheaded fundraising efforts for the project.

Amy and Ellie Swenson water the new flowers in the newly painted planters at Raymond and Boyliss in St. Anthony Park. Maintaining the planters is a volunteer effort by area residents. Plants were purchased with a $250 grant from the St. Anthony Park Garden Club. Paint was supplied at a discount by Noll Hardware.

Bob Simons loads newspapers into one of Eureka Recycling’s new biodiesel trucks during a Wednesday morning run in St. Anthony Park. The 20 percent biodiesel blend used in the new trucks cuts emissions that cause smog and pollution. St. Anthony Park residents are invited to submit suggestions for a name for the new truck. Forms will be available at the St. Anthony Park Library July 3, 4, 6 and 7. Look for one of the new trucks in the Fourth of July parade.

Rebecca Tellefsen updates the message on St. Anthony Park Elementary’s new sign on the corner of Como Avenue and Keppel Street. Tellefsen organized a committee of the School Association that researched design options and hired a contractor. Funds were provided by the School Association, which had been saving money for the project for three years.

St. Anthony Park paleontologists make historic discovery
by John Marino

Kristina Curry Rogers and Raymond Rogers have spent the past decade unearthing dinosaur fossils in Madagascar, oft the southeast coast of Africa. But the biggest discovery of their professional lives occurred in Chicago.

"Most people think discoveries are made in the middle of nowhere," said Kristi, who lives with her husband Ray and their two children on Princeton Street in St. Anthony Park. "But this is one of those discoveries we couldn't make until it was brought back, cleaned off and put back together again before we could study it."

The Rogers studied several dinosaur bones at the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago in late 2001 and early 2002. What they found has created quite the buzz in the world of paleontology: a 30-foot dinosaur that eats its own.

"There's no evidence that they were actually hunting and killing their own," said Ray.
"That wouldn't have been a very good ecologic strategy for a large, dangerous animal."

However, it's fairly clear from the evidence that these giant dinosaurs, known as Majungatholus atopus, were eating the remains of their own species, a practice that even today isn't so uncommon among many animals. This discovery is an historic first regarding dinosaurs and was big enough news to make the pages of the April 2003 issue of Nature magazine.

"We have the smoking gun in the form of diagnostic tooth marks, and we can definitely rule out all of the other carnivores known to have been on the scene," Ray said, adding that the scientific community agrees.

"There hasn't been a single detector," he said. "This is as close as you can get to a snapshot in the fossil record. It looked like they were trying to scrape every little bit of flesh that was left on the bones."

It makes sense, Kristi said.
Climate changes some 65-70 million years ago caused periodic droughts that drove the survivors to eat whatever was available.

"Ray was looking for any little marks on bones, and he started seeing several bones that were heavily chewed upon," she said.

"The fossil evidence is compelling and unprecedented," Ray said.
"We have examined literally
t housands of dinosaur bones from sites around the world, and we've never seen fossil material quite like this."

Also collaborating on the Madagascar project is David Krause, a professor of anatomical sciences at Stony Brook University in New York on Long Island.

"Getting published in Nature is significant," Krause said.
"It's the preeminent science magazine out there," said Ray. "It's global in its distribution. This is how you get your science out to both the public and the scientific community. It's high profile. You should be proud of that."

Psychologist sheds light on record keeping

by Dave Healy

When was the last time you were at a meeting and a fight broke out over whose turn it was to take minutes? Most people don't get too excited by record keeping. Taking notes, keeping minutes, maintaining records—for many of us, these are necessary evils, and we'd be embarrassed to let anyone see our files and discover what a pitiful job we do.

Not Ellen Lucpeker. As a licensed psychologist and clinical social worker, Lucpeker knows the importance of record keeping. In fact, she's so convinced of the value of maintaining accurate records in her profession that she wrote a book about it.

"Record Keeping in Psychotherapy and Counseling: Protecting Confidentiality and the Professional Relationship" was published last December by Brunner-Routledge.

Lucpeker, whose office is at Como and Donwell in St. Anthony Park, has known for a long time how important record keeping is for therapists and counselors, but it wasn't until she began fielding questions from fellow professionals, as part of a volunteer consultation service she participated in, that she began to realize just how many people had questions about the topic.

She gets calls from people who are just starting out, who have been supplanted and were nervous about what they'd have to produce at a deposition. People who were unsure about the doctrine of informed consent. People who wondered what their obligations were regarding client confidentiality. What kind of information they should be documenting or how long they were required to keep records.

"The same questions kept emerging," says Lucpeker. "And people asked, 'Is any of this in writing?' I'd say, 'No, tell them no.'"

Those questions are what led to Lucpeker's book. In 1997 she gave a workshop on record keeping at a professional conference. The next year she started writing. Because she couldn't put her career on hold to be an author, the book was compiled slowly, fitted into a busy schedule of counseling and working on another venture.

Lucpeker started two years ago called Living Portraits.

"I thought writing the book would be easier," Lucpeker says. "I had a 40-page outline and a pretty good idea of what I wanted to cover."

Just like many authors, though, she discovered that a book develops a life of its own.

The book's publication turned out to come at a propitious time. For one thing, there was a 20-year anniversary. In the news, attention has been focused on such issues as confidentiality and professional ethics—topics Lucpeker's book addresses. Also, recent federal legislation on privacy rights has prompted many organizations to review and revise their procedures regarding the information they keep on clients and customers.

"In an increasingly litigious society, the importance of record keeping has never been greater," says Lucpeker.

HOLLY HOUSE celebrates 25 years of integrated health care
by Antonie Young

After 25 years in the field of holistic health care, HOLLY HOUSE Center for Integrated HealthCare continues to uphold its status as a pioneer in natural health care. A testament to the success of the clinic is its ever-growing popularity and loyal clientele.

Located in the main Park Bank building on Como Avenue, HOLLY HOUSE was named for its original location on Holliy Avenue in St. Paul. The clinic's director, Dr. Patricia Lawler, moved the center to its current location in St. Anthony Park area several years ago. Lawler has been practicing chiropractic since 1977 and has advanced training in other areas such as nutrition, acupuncture and allergy elimination. She founded HOLLY HOUSE in 1978.

According to Bill Brown, Lawler's husband and HOLLY HOUSE administrator, theirs is the oldest integrated health clinic in the Twin Cities. Lawler said that HOLLY HOUSE is more than a typical holistic healing center due to the variety of services and expertise that she and her specialists offer. "As an integrated health care clinic, we offer different options," she said. "Many patients come to us having had medical care that didn't solve their problems, or perhaps they have read about holistic health care and want a non-pharmaceutical approach."

Lawler added that HOLLY HOUSE's holistic approach is distinctive due to its integrated nature. Integrated health care is concerned with the complete restoration or maintenance of optimal health.

This means that a client's total health—physical, emotional, mental and spiritual—is assessed and a personalized system of remedies is created using the clinic's many natural treatment options. "Chiropractic was a good place to start," Dr. Lawler said of her early years. "I've always believed in an integrated approach, and chiropractic came closest to the ideals that I believed to be right. In school I was also introduced to Oriental medicine and I realized there were other ways to look at health."

Lawler emphasizes the whole foods movement and lifestyle management concepts, combined with her chiropractic background, led her to form an integrated method of holistic health care.

"There are lots of 'trends,' methods of service at HOLLY HOUSE," said Brown. "We work in a way that integrates them by applying them together in a strategy for better health." Among the tools available at the center are chiropractic, clinical nutrition, massage therapy, acupuncture, energy healing, kinesiology and yoga.

After completing a comprehensive exam, Lawler determines what remedies and treatments will be most effective for a particular patient.

According to Lawler, the people who walk through her door come from extremely diverse health situations. She says that variety is what makes her work interesting and enjoyable. "As practitioners, we attempt to spark a patient's own life force. We try to help patients nurture that force to achieve better health," she said.

Lawler added that with all the tools, knowledge and experience available, her practice finally comes down to the goal of getting patients in touch with the vitality inside them. "When we connect with our vitality, that's when we connect with our power to be healthy."

HOLLY HOUSE practitioners follow an original four-vector model of health care to assess a patient's health. These vectors represent possible stressors: mental/emotional, nutritional/chemical, electromagnetic and structural. The vector model maintains that all disease is a manifestation of one or more of these areas of distress. "In our paradigm, we don't treat disease," said Dr. Lawler. "We go underneath to find out the cause of the problem. It's a little like detective work, finding out the causes of that disease."

Brown said it's been interesting to watch the health care profession change. "Lawler began when holistic healing was on the edge. What we've seen in 25 years is that established medical systems have come to accept our principles. Today, holistic health care has become mainstream. It's a whole new world."

Lawler continues to study natural health developments and develop her understanding of new methods. "It's been fun to see my work inspire others and see how the movement is spreading," she commented. "It's very exciting."
Community Carnival
Twin City Littner Home will hold its third annual community carnival on July 26 from noon-4 p.m. at 2490 W. Como Ave.
The carnival will feature a petting zoo, food, games, prizes and other family events. Also, the Littner auxiliary will host an ice cream social and entertainment.
All neighborhood residents are invited to attend.

Arts Event
On Thursday, July 17 at 7:30 p.m., the Church of the Holy Childhood will host Maitresse des Hauts de France, a choir of 21 boys age 8-16. The evening of sacred music is entitled "Les Peints Chanteurs du Comte d'Flandre."
The Holy Childhood concert will be part of the choir's U.S. tour. The concert is free, but an offering will be taken. For more information, call 644-7495.

People
Leah Steinberg of Como Park Senior High School received an Outstanding High School Senior in French Award from the American Association of Teachers of French. The award is made annually to a graduating senior who has demonstrated excellence in the study of French language and the many cultures where it is spoken. Steinberg ranked first in the state and seventh nationally in the National French Contest, "Le Grand Concours." She plans to attend Carleton College in the fall.

Emily Letsenrau, who graduated this year from Como Park Senior High School, has received one of seven Family Education scholarships from HealthEast Foundation. The awards are presented to children of HealthEast employees to help support their postsecondary education and to recognize academic achievement and service to the community. Letsenrau will attend Bernand College.

Mark de Naray has been named president and CEO of the Minnesota Diversified Industries, 1700 Wynne. Formerly de Naray was a principal of the Comfort Corporation. He will focus on increasing MDI sales of assembly, packaging and fulfillment services to both government and private-sector companies.

MDI is one of the largest human services nonprofits in Minnesota. Its mission is to create employment for people with disabilities and disadvantages. MDI provides employment for 600 individuals at three sites in St. Paul, Hibbing and Grand Rapids.

said, “is by establishing partnerships with other entities such as the city of St. Paul, foundations, nonprofits, and others from the private sector.”

The first business benefit from the new program is Today Fashion, which will construct a new building at the corner of University and Western Avenues in St. Paul. In addition to the borrower’s equity, project costs will be met by loans from St. Anthony Park Bank and the Community Reinvestment Fund. The CRF is a nonprofit organization that operates a secondary market for economic development loans.

downtown St. Paul. According to Ron Reis, CEO and founder, neither organization currently plans to close any sites. Donna King, CEO and founder, described the merger as one of opportunity rather than necessity.

“The are two strong, secure organizations with proven track records,” she said. “We believe that the enhanced excellence of a combined child- and family-serving agency will benefit the community and we serve.”

King mentioned several specific ways that CHS’s services would be improved by the merger. First, the CHS agency’s services can be provided more effectively, for children from families in crisis.

“The focus of our crisis nursery is on immediate intervention,” said King. “But often the families who find themselves in crisis would benefit from long-term counseling—in, say, financial management or substance abuse. That’s where PFS’s expertise will be invaluable.”

Reed gave a comparable example. “Let’s say we’re doing counseling with a couple who are experiencing fertility problems. Now we won’t have to send them to a different service provider for adoption counseling. We want to be able to say, ‘We can help you right here.’” get calls from newspapers."

From around the world, as well as from around the corner. "Many of our discoveries in Madagascar have been published," Ray said. "Arguably, this got the biggest press all over the world: Japan, Europe, Russia, Australia." Alas, all the international fame has not brought fortune, but Kristi and Ray aren't complaining.

"There's no money for doing the research," Kristi said, "but it boosts you in the eyes of your colleagues. We don't do it for the money. And, as Ray added, "it's great for your ego." Kristi doesn't mind keeping her day job. She's the curator of paleontology at the Science Museum of Minnesota. As a steward of the collection, her position is mainly research related. In the Madagascar project, she uses her expertise to collect fossils and make sure they are properly identified.

The theropod's recent find has spurred a renewed interest by the museum to "reinvigorate their dinosaur research," Ray said. An exact copy cast of the dinosaur's skull is on display at the Science Museum of Minnesota through July.

Ray is an associate professor and chair of the Geology Department at Macalester College. He is also a research associate at both the Science Museum of Minnesota and the Field Museum in Chicago.

Ray and Kristi also teach a dinosaur class at Macalester College for non-majors and have conducted field research in Montana, Argentina and Zimbabwe, as well as Madagascar. They have two children: Caitlin, 13, who is Ray's daughter and Kristi's stepdaughter, and Lucy, who was born in April.

"The Madagascar project continues and we're going to return and continue work there, both of us," Kristi said. But she added they would wait another year or so until Lucy's natalism will be able to handle the necessary malaria inoculations for overseas travel.

Later this summer, however, they will take the baby to Montana for her first dinosaur dig. Meanwhile, Caitlin, a volunteer of many digs, will head East to visit her grandmother in New Jersey.

A Foundation of Neighbors Celebrating Community

By Jon Schmucker
Executive Director
St. Anthony Park Community Foundation

Every successful community needs celebrations. These events allow neighbors to come together to enjoy family and friends, old and new, and when the events are held outdoors, we can enjoy the green, the "small town" environment as well.

There are two important summer events that allow us to do all of the above: the Arts Festival and the Fourth of July. These eventful community-wide celebrations are organized every year solely by volunteers. They take months of planning and cooperation by many, but I'd like to give special recognition to the leaders.

Arline West has run the Arts Festival for the past 10 years. She is lucky to have her husband, Kevin Bevis, and recent daughter of Tina Hughes, who this year put together the band shell entertainment. Arline and her couple have to screen the more than 140 participants to ensure a healthy mix of quality and diversity: contact the city for permits and maintenance; and, on the actual day of the festival, ride hend from early morning until early evening handing the duets of adjustments that make for a happy and smoothly-run event.

The Fourth celebration is grouped by a trio of talented neighbors, Julie Glasco, Sandy Skeby, and Cindy Thresher. They took charge several years ago when the celebration was climaxing with dwindling support and stabilized what has always been the core of some activities in the Park.
They are aided by many volunteers who help run the events, and by the Langford Booster Club which organizes and staffs the concession stand.

Both of these events require untold time, energy, and dedication. On behalf of our neighborhood, the St. Anthony Park Community Foundation would like to say
"Thank you" to Arline, Kevin, Julia, Skeby, Sandy, and all who help to give us that precious gift of joy to the joyfully celebratory bonds that tie us together as neighbors and community.

A few weeks ago I started to experience disabling pain in my abdomen. It came and went, and I didn't bother to go see my doctor. A couple of weeks later I felt it again, and by the time I got in to see a doctor about it, the pain was gone again. I had a few tests done, and the clinic concluded that I must have been having digestive problems. I didn't really like the vague diagnosis, but then I didn't like sitting around in doctor's offices waiting for tests and appointments either.

Then suddenly, the pain returned, and this time it didn't go away. After two days of agony, I finally went to the emergency room, where I was put on painkillers and given X-rays, a CT scan and an MRI. The diagnosis this time was kidney stones; the hospital kept me overnight, and a surgeon operated the next day.

What did this experience tell me about myself? That despite all the times I have encouraged others to see a doctor right away for severe symptoms, I didn't do that when it happened to me. You see, the pain started up again the day before my family was about to leave town for a long-anticipated camping trip, and I didn't have time to be sick then. So instead of going to a doctor right away, I tried to tough it out—as if that would somehow make it go away so my health wouldn't ruin our family plans.

Sonic or stupid? Probably both.

While in the hospital, I tried to call everyone from my job and my circle of friends so that no one was overly inconvenience by my illness. Then, after I was released, I decided to make up to my kids for canceled camping trip by taking them to Camp Snoopy at the Mall of America for the day. The only thing I can say about that less-than-brilliant idea is that Bloomingdale's has an extremely comfortable ladies' lounge, with wonderfully soft upholstered furniture to collapse on when you're about to pass out from pain.

The reason I'm describing this whole thing here is that I don't think I'm alone. While I may be worse than some, most of us in this society have trouble acknowledging and accepting our illnesses and the diminished capacity of our bodies as we age.

In my case, my decision to put off seeing a doctor when I first started having pains and my acceptance of a vague diagnosis caused my symptoms to worsen. Before I was properly diagnosed and treated. Although I advocate for others in the health care system as part of my job, I didn't insist that additional tests be done to determine the cause of my problems the first time around. I should have.

And once I had been diagnosed and treated, I tried to jump right back into my daily life as if I'd just fought off a head cold rather than undergoing surgery.

My body brought me right back to reality by collapsing on me when I refused to accept its need for time to recuperate. And I realized that if I'm getting to the age in my life when I need to be more respectful of my aches and pains, and accept the increasing limitations I have. This is not a lesson I wanted to learn, but it has been a necessary one for me, and I'm pretty sure for everyone else too.

Maurice Chevalier has been credited with saying, when he reached 80, that he felt great, compared to the alternative. Very true! But as we age, we must also remember that we have been living in our bodies for quite some time, and the wear and tear of decades of daily living cannot be erased—or ignored.

We need to remember that as the person living in our own body, in some ways each of us knows more about our own body than any medical professional. It is important to take the time to explain symptoms thoroughly to doctors, tell them when we feel that we need more care and give ourselves permission to take it easy when our bodies are recovering from a trauma such as surgery.

It is easier for me to write about this than to put it into practice. But I don't think I'm the only one who ever feels this way. I hope if you recognize yourself in any part of my story, that reading it encourages you to take the time to take better care of yourself and insist on getting the care you need from our health care system.

interest in urban living. Because core cities have no undeveloped land, adding housing means redevelopment, and often what gets replaced is industrial buildings.

In the southwest corner of St. Anthony Park, for example, Golden Marrow Development—an organization that occupies 3.5 acres of former industrial land on the border between St. Paul and Minneapolis—next to Prosper Park. And construction of an adjacent 267-unit apartment building at 809 Berry Street is under way.

Meanwhile, another redevelopment project continues to move forward on University Avenue. MetroPlains, a St. Paul company, is planning a mixed-use development on the Johnson Ford site, between Cambridge Street and Hampden Avenue. The conversion of this once-vibrant industrial land to housing is a mixed blessing. Urban geographer David Lanegran sees it as an indication of values that may be at odds with urban communities in St. Anthony Park. In his recent study of St. Anthony Park, Lanegran cited such conversion as a reason for optimism about the neighborhood’s health.

At a time when St. Paul and Minneapolis are facing severe cuts in state funding through local government aid, being able to increase housing density in the core cities has obvious financial appeal. For example, the property now occupied by the Emerald Gardens/Berry Street housing development is valued at about $70 million for tax purposes, compared to $7 million when it was an industrial area.

On the other hand, losing industry means losing jobs. University UNITED, a coalition of business and neighborhood organizations along the University Avenue corridor, has documented a 36 percent loss of manufacturing jobs in the Midway area between 1993 and 2002. Of the seven largest manufacturing companies in the area in 1993, only two remain: Rock-Tenn (formerly Waldorf) and Minnesota Diversified Industries.

But despite a shrinking local manufacturing base over the past decade, several recent events provide some cause for optimism about a turn-around in the area’s commercial-industrial fortunes.

The 2003 session produced legislation enabling the creation of tax-exempt development zones in Minnesota.

St. Paul Mayor Randy Kelly has announced a goal to establish a biotechnology corridor near St. Paul Central, the University of Minnesota.

The St. Paul Port Authority has created an industrial development zone in an 11-acre area in St. Anthony Park bounded by Energy Park Drive on the north, the BNSF railroad tracks on the south, Raymond Avenue on the east and the University of Minnesota on the west.

University Enterprise Laboratories has announced plans to purchase and renovate a facility at 1000 Wergin Drive, just north of the intersection of University Avenue and Highway 280. The newly created nonprofit organization, described itself as a “laboratory-based incubator” designed to encourage the development of Minnesota’s biotechnology industry.

These developments prompted University UNITED to create an Industry Planning Task Force that will study the prospects for industrial and commercial development along the University Avenue corridor. The task force includes representatives from businesses and four neighborhood organizations: Handline-Midway, Merriam Park, St. Anthony Park and Prosper Park. It will be led by St. Anthony Park resident Sherril Eagles, a software engineer at Medronic, Inc. and a member of the District 12 Community Council.

The task force’s work is important, said Eagles, because there is no government body responsible for planning industrial development.

"St. Paul’s Department of Planning and Economic Development does planning, but not for industry," he noted. "The Port Authority concerns itself with industry, but it doesn’t do planning. The kind of planning the task force anticipates doing will benefit not only University UNITED but also the District 12 Community Council, said Eagles. If we can identify needs and goals for industrial development in the area, that will help inform St. Anthony Park’s district plan, just as David Lanegran’s study provided important information on housing and retail concerns. While the task force will not limit its attention to any single industry, Eagles said, he expects that the area’s prospects for biotechnology development will generate considerable interest. He mentioned several advantages, such as the proximity to the University of Minnesota and its research hospital, and the kind of neighborhood amenities that high-tech workers find attractive.

The two driving industries in biotech are agriculture and medicine, and the U of M’s reputation in those areas is a big plus," he said. "There’s also the possibility a life sciences neighborhood’ in or near St. Anthony Park could serve as a southern gateway to the St. Paul campus.

Eagles acknowledged that competition for biotechnology development will be fierce. Not only are the Twin Cities in competition with other cities such as Seattle, Boston and San Francisco, but St. Paul and St. Paul could end up vying with each other, especially because one of the areas that high-tech industries value—along the U of M’s busway—is right on the border between the two cities.

Clearly, our chances of success are much greater if the two cities cooperate rather than compete," said Eagles. "But that means as each city plans development along its border, it needs to consider the impact of that development on the other side of Highway 280.”

"Things are happening quickly," Eagles added. "The task force has only met once, and already we feel as if things have gotten ahead of us. These are exciting times in our neighborhood.”
