St. Anthony Park Arts Festival turns 35

by Dave Healy

When you've been around for 35 years, the idea is not necessarily to be surprising. Regular attendees of the St. Anthony Park Arts Festival have come to expect certain things.

They know the event always takes place the first Saturday in June and that, despite what some people may say, it doesn't always rain that day.

They know that the night before, the Northern Lights 4H Club and the St. Anthony Park Community Band host a pie social in the St. Anthony Park Bank Drive-in parking lot at Como and Dowell.

They know that on Saturday many merchants along Como Avenue from Carter to Dowell have sidewalk sales.

They know that the St. Anthony Park Library holds a used book sale from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

They know that the St. Anthony Park Garden Club holds a plant sale at Park Service, 2277 Como.

They know there is food and entertainment and displays by a variety of community organizations.

And art. Yes, they know there will be lots and lots of art, some 120 vendors—located either in front of the library or on the Luther Seminary lawn at the corner of Como and Luther Place—selling paintings, drawings, pottery, jewelry, rugs, sculpture, clothing, toys, quilts, cards, etc.

Many of these artists have participated in the festival before, but some are new. So although this neighborhood arts festival has been around the block a time or two, there's reason even for old-timers to make another visit to Como Avenue this year.

Grace Pass lets her pottery settle the art-craft question

by Natalie Zett

A May visit to Grace Pass's studio finds the St. Paul potter busily preparing for the annual St. Anthony Park Arts Festival on June 5. Throwing a slab of clay on her potter's wheel is a daily occurrence now, along with glazing and firing other pieces that are further along in the creation process.

The nearby shelves of finished bowls and cups are a testimony to what can become of amorphous lumps of dirt in the right hands. The question remains, though: Are these beauteous creations artwork—or craft?

"Don't go there," chided Pass, who's been creating pottery—as well as teaching others to do likewise—for many years. "Is it art or craft? Who knows? I just create what I like and make sure it's functional, and right now I'm getting ready for that fair."

For the past 25 years, Pass has been a mainstay at the annual St. Anthony Park Arts Festival, an event for which she spends weeks preparing.

St. Anthony Park Arts Festival
Saturday, June 5, 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.
Como Avenue between Carter Avenue and Luther Place
Music and entertainment: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.
Art for viewing and purchase: all day
Food vendors: all day

According to Pass, "This is a very well-run art fair with a long history, which is something when you consider that it's all-volunteer. And they give me my same favorite spot each year, by the steps of the library."

Pass holds to a philosophy of simplicity and practicality. "I sell usable pieces—pots and mugs mainly. Everything I do is simple, and simple equals good in this case. There is a psychology of cups, you know; they become a part of you—a part of your life. If they're good, you use them every morning to drink your coffee or tea. They should be comfortable and comforting."

Her commitment to utilitarianism most likely stems from her upbringing on a farm in northern Minnesota. "All of us in the family loved hard work," she said. It was in that same small farming community where she was first exposed to pottery, too. "Our school offered a limited number of electives, and I ended up working with clay."

Pass was also fortunate to have a mother who encouraged her children's passions. "I attribute my success to her," she said. "I mean, this was a woman who was raising her family in the 1950s, yet she insisted that she was not a farmer's wife but was a farmer. She worked alongside my dad and worked as hard as he did."

After marrying and moving to the Twin Cities in the 1970s, Pass continued her studies at the Minnesota Museum of Art School, where she became totally "hooked on clay."

Shortly after enrolling, she learned a lesson that applies to most budding potters: There are only so many mugs and plates a house can hold. This is how she ended up pooling her resources with other potters and began working the art fair circuit.

Como's choir prepares for Carnegie Hall trip

by Michelle Christianson

If you've had any exposure to the Como Park High School music program in recent years, you may have a hard time believing what Carole Whitney faced when she came to the school 10 years ago. There had been no choir at the school for 3 years before she came, and interest was low.

"My first choir had just a few singers, but I took anyone who wanted to sing—and still do," said Whitney.

Through the encouragement of counselors and Whitney's energetic approach to music, the program grew to what it is today: four choirs, an after-school vocal jazz group and yearly appearances at the Minnesota State High School League Music Contest in solo, small ensemble and full choir categories.

In addition, Whitney runs the Altogether at the school, which most recently presented "The Canterbury Tales.

Next year Whitney will bring a choir to New York's Carnegie Hall, where they have been invited to join four other choirs from various parts of the country in a five-day residency celebrating Black History Month. Lawrence Burnett, director of choral activities at Carlton College, will be the director for the ensemble, which will perform a concert of African-American spirituals at the hall on February 22. The group will also sing in at least one other forum, probably a church.

Because of the cost of the trip ($1450 per student), the size of the group may be narrowed to 30-40 singers. Since the school district doesn't pay for anything like this, parents and students have planned several fundraisers. Parents held a garage sale at the school on May 22, some students will be bagging groceries and later this summer students will wash cars asking for pledges for donations.

In addition, Whitney is applying for corporate sponsorship and would be delighted to receive donations from anyone else in the community.

"This isn't the first time Whitney has brought a group to New York. Last year the vocal jazz group sang at St. John the Divine Cathedral. Now, as then, the choice of music reflects the purpose and venue of the performance. The choirs all sing classics, popular, world and sacred music.

Next fall the choir will perform "Sensational the Musical" in November and will do a masterworks concert with the school orchestra.

Whitney is also excited about the three-year composer-in-residence program with Cary John Franklin sponsored by VocalEssence. Franklin is composing pieces for all choirs, with input and feedback from the students.

Como Park is just one of three schools, along with Red Wing and Mound-Rollinsdale, to take part in the program, which culminates in a choral festival next year, Oct. 14-15 at Orchestra Hall.

Franklin is especially interested in Hmong culture and integrating traditional Hmong

Foundation announces 2004 grant recipients

Eight neighborhood organizations will share $16,300

by Dave Healy

On May 21 the St. Anthony Park Community Foundation announced the first awards of its newly formatted grants program. Eight neighborhood organizations will receive grants totaling $16,300. Up to $7,000 in additional money will be awarded throughout the year for special requests.

According to Julie Cassay, SAPCPF board chair, a recently completed strategic plan identified a need for more focused and flexible financial support for the nonprofit community.

As its April meeting, the board decided on three main categories: (1) grants of $1,000 or more in six areas of focus—arts and humanities, community economic development, education, environment, health and housing; (2) special initiatives; and (3) requests of less than $1,000 throughout the year.

Chad Schumacher, executive director, said the special initiatives grants will reflect areas ranked highest in the recent neighborhood report: housing, education and the health of the business district.

Schumacher said the foundation is also committed to strengthening its relationships with area nonprofits by offering help with strategic networking, planning and any other resources required for the long-term viability of the community's most important assets.

The $23,000 award amount covering all grant categories makes the fifth consecutive year the SAPCPF has increased its giving, bringing in 5-year grant total to over $80,000.

This year's grantees are:

Murray Junior High School—$2,500 to help replace the sound and lighting system in the auditorium.

Music in the Park Series—$1,000 in organizational support.

St. Anthony Park Black Nurse Program—$1,000 to support a project to reduce waste in the community and improve senior outreach. These grants will be achieved by distributing cloth shopping bags, an exchange program replacing mercury thermometers with digital, and help with junk mail reduction and garage sales.

St. Anthony Park Community Band—$300 for sheet music and a sound system.

St. Anthony Park Community Council—$2,500 to help pay for an urban planner to coordinate a neighborhood plan for District 12.

St. Anthony Park School Association—$5,000 for general operating support of Kinderplan, a program designed to keep children with the same staff all day by offering a fee-based, half-day enrichment option along with the regular district-funded, half-day kindergarten.

St. Anthony Park Supervised Study and Tutoring Program—$2,000 for computer equipment, software and reaching materials to help inner children of low-income African immigrants.

St. Paul Vocal Forum—$2,000 to support the development and implementation of a comprehensive plan for future expansion.

"Many business and community leaders in the Twin Cities believe the Central Corridor should have been the first transit line developed," Beson said. "Connecting the east and west metro regions to traffic demand that is already high and will only increase."

One vision for the Central Corridor is a light rail line running from the Union Depot in downtown St. Paul to the State Capitol, then down University Avenue to the Hiawatha line in Minneapolis, connecting at the Downtown East/Metrodome stop.

One of CCP's specific goals was to have $5.5 million added to the 2006 capital bonding bill. These funds would be used to leverage a federal match, resulting in $15.5 million for transit system improvements.

The state legislature failed to pass a bonding bill during its regular session. At this writing, it's not clear whether a special session will be called.

Beson said that if the legislature does take up the bonding bill, the CCP remains "cautiously optimistic" that their request will be considered favorably.

Como Park
A representative of the Capitol Region Watershed District will attend the June 15 District 10 Board meeting to discuss the subdivision of the Watershed District as it relates to proposed street work in the area for 2005. Public participation is encouraged. The meeting will be at North Dale Recreation Center, 1414 N. St. Albans, at 7 p.m.

The St. Paul Police and Fire Departments have requested that residents do a better job of putting reflective address numbers on their vehicles. When there is a call that requires the police or fire department to enter the alley and look for an address, their job would be much simpler if the numbers were clearly positioned and reflective. District 10 now has reflective numbers available for free to residents. Call the office at 644-3889.

Representatives of District 10’s Executive Committee met with city staff from several departments, police and the Business Review Council to discuss problems of peddling in the area during State Fair time.

During the 2004 Fair, St. Paul’s Department of Licenses, Inspections and Environmental Protection will be distributing informational handouts to outdoor sales locations that are not in compliance with zoning regulations. Questions and concerns regarding this issue may be directed to the District 10 office at 644-3889.

The annual Como Lake Water Festival will be held at Como Park on Saturday, June 19. This event combines fun, education and volunteering to clean up the lake area. Everyone is welcome.

The event begins at 11 a.m. with volunteers doing a shoreline cleanup and a canoe cruise for children. Following the cleanup, participants may redeem coupons for a free lunch at Black Bear Crossing.

From noon to 6 p.m., parks staff will conduct tours highlighting shoreline restoration, and exhibitors will educate about water quality issues and environmentally sound lawn and garden care.

There will be music, face painting, crafts, games and fishing instruction. To volunteer for cleanup activities, register in advance at the Central Drive Office (647-6816). Bring your own gloves.

Falcon Heights
The City Council has accepted plans and specifications for improvements to Carris Field and has authorized the next step: advertising for bids. The project is scheduled for completion by hockey season, with a lot to look ready by mid-summer.

A city-wide food drive contributed $1,000 and 3,000 pounds of food to the Keystone Community Services Food Shelf.

Ramsey County residents can dispose of wood waste (no stumps or treated wood) at four compost sites. The closest site for Falcon Heights residents is located in the Midway at Pierce Butler and Fairview.

Lauderdale
The City of Lauderdale will hold its annual summer celebration, "Day in the Park," on July 24. Look for more information next month.

St. Anthony Park
Organizers of the annual Fourth of July celebration will hold a mailing session on Monday, June 7 at 6:30 p.m. at Langford Park. Volunteers are needed to help stuff and address envelopes that will be mailed to neighborhood residents informing them of this year's events and requesting donations.

The Fourth of July event depends on contributions to defray over $6,000 in expenses for mailing, permits, insurance, portable toilets, flags, etc.

To volunteer for the June 7 mailing, just show up at Langford Rec Center. To volunteer for other tasks on or before July 4, call Julie Glowka at 647-9969. To register your group for the parade, call Sandee Kelsey at 645-5053.

Mamas get out of the house to make music
New group to perform at St. Anthony Park Arts Festival
by Lisa Steinmann

"Mama" may well be the first onomatopoeic word ever uttered.
The natural music of the word perfectly suits a group of five women in St. Anthony Park who have joined together to form a band they call the Mamas.

A recent morning rehearsal at band member Priscilla Porter's home found the Mamas sipping coffee, strumming guitars and bleeding vocal harmonies amid the living room props of a busy family life.

They were trying out a new song, "In My Daughter's Eyes" by Martina McBride.

Against Porter's bass line, Ann Fane provided a steady roll of harmony on her acoustic guitar while Burra Krugler plucked a decorative melody on her. Singer Shelly Dinsen followed along quietly humming

while Rebecca Buller delivered the lyrics in a clear, high voice,
"In my daughter's eyes / I am a hero / I am strong and wise / but the truth is plain to see / she was sent to rescue me / I can see who
I want to be / in my daughter's eyes."

A spring breeze moved the lace curtains at the window and the roof was filled with an emotion true to the hearts of these women, all mothers of daughters as well as a few sons.

It was the children that brought the Mamas together.
They met while their children were students at St. Anthony Park Elementary School.

It was Krugler, an active performer in other bands and as a solo artist, who persuaded the others to join her on stage. They have been playing together since last November, slowly building their repertoire and list of performances at places like Coffee Grounds, Border's Book Store and GinGigo Cafe.

Forming a musical group was a big step for women who had been busy for years raising young children and working other jobs.

Porter had been in bands before, but that was 20 years ago—before children and her career as a pathologist.

Buller, director of the Minnesota Psychological Association, loves to sing, but her main performance experience was limited to church.

Dinsen, a University administrator, had never performed in public before, nor had Ann Fane, a school nurse.

According to Buller, "Our kids are old enough now, we can start taking time to do some good

Because our PETS
are FAMILY...

Seeing and hearing

Americans are generally considered a pretty utilitarian bunch. We think of ourselves as people who get things done. We tamed the wilderness, invented the assembly line, cured smallpox, put a man on the moon. Some of our civic and spiritual forerunners were pilgrims, who took a view of idleness. One of our patron saints is Benjamin Franklin, whose collective wisdom can be distilled into a couple of admonitions get organized and get busy. Our major contribution to the discipline of philosophy is pragmatism.

This legacy may not readily translate itself to leaving much room for art. While some forms of artistic expression—poetry, for example—have a utilitarian dimension, generally speaking the arts are defined, at least in part, by their noninstrumentality. Artistic production doesn’t make much of a contribution to the GNP. Looking at paintings or sculpture, listening to music, watching plays, reading poetry—not only do these activities fail the test of productivity, they also constitute a distraction from more functional pursuits.

And yet for all that our lives are surrounded by art. Want to take in a concert? Watch a dance? Visit a gallery? Read a novel? You could spend the weekend doing just that, just trying to reduce your choices to a manageable number, leaving you no time to actually go anywhere or do anything.

We are awash in art. But art’s ubiquity threatens to render it even more trivial. Hang a drawing on your wall and in time you tend not to notice it—unless it’s crooked. Drive past a sculpture every day on your way to work and you no longer see it, while you’re driving or cooking or cleaning or Web surfing. Are you really listening?

The artist’s task, then, is not only to convince us that attending to art is worthwhile endeavor in the face of more “useful” activities, but also to get us to actually pay attention, to quit scanning and glancing and multi-tasking and really see, really listen.

Those who emphasize the need for a “sense of place” in contemporary life—be it a neighborhood or a university campus—would probably give us an acknowledgement that perception has many levels and that too often things go in one ear and out the other without much processing in between.

“To read well,” wrote Thoreau in “Wilden,” “that is to read true books in a true spirit, is a noble exercise, and one that will teach the reader more than any exercise which the customs of the day esteem. It requires a training such as the athletes underwent; the steadiness, intrepidity almost of the whole life of this object. Books must be read thoughtfully and deliberately as they were written.”

That’s a pretty tall order. Thoreau worked on “Wilden” off and on for seven years. What is it going to take for us to begin reading his book as thoughtfully and deliberately as it was written?

Those who have ears to hear, let them hear.

On May 18, four works of public art were officially dedicated at University Avenue. With support from the city of St. Paul, St. Anthony Park Bank and a host of other private funders, Forecast Public Artworks organized the projects and worked with local artists Al Wadianski, Marcia McEachon, Jane Frenz-Kluh and Lisa Elias. From Fairview to Raymond, these installations stand out like blooming flowers in a vacant lot.

As the director of Forecast, which has headquartered on University Avenue for the past 12 years, I felt it was time to do something in our own neighborhood.

Why has it taken so long for public art to emerge on St. Paul’s west end of University Avenue? The arts are clearly a high priority here, an essential ingredient of our route high quality of life. The Raymond Avenue corner is one of the few reasons to stop along University. The Metropolitan Regional Arts Council is here, along with a dozen art service organizations, several small press businesses and dozens of individual artists who call this area home. While we don’t have many galleries, theaters and performance venues, the wealth of arts organizations and the annual Arts Off Raymond studio crawl make it clear that this is a thriving arts district.

But you wouldn’t know it on the street. If you drive through the midsection of University Avenue—the geographic center of the Twin Cities—it doesn’t feel like the center of anything.

Public art can help change that. These four works—modest sculptures that include seating or benches—encourage pedestrians to stop and explore. They add a visual accent to the otherwise drab corridor. And they are visible to an endless drive-by audience, 24 hours a day.

Hopefully this is only the beginning. These new projects are meant to demonstrate what’s possible to local businesses and developers. They should get the idea that it’s okay to include art on the streetscape.

It’s a good thing to commission artists, especially some of the talented individuals who live and work right here. From my experience, the city has been supportive, but the private sector clearly needs to take the lead.

University Avenue is not the only place public art can make a difference. You don’t have to travel far to find neighborhoods in the Twin Cities filled with murals, sculptures, community arts activities and public performance events. St. Anthony Park residents should get on board and consider what types of public art will add to the neighborhood’s health and vitality, contribute to its identity and instill a sense of pride in our shared spaces—the public realm.

It’s time to put artists to work in the community, not just adding art to the landscape but engaging young people, enlivening public places, challenging the status quo and making our neighborhood a better place.

Jack Becker is executive director of Forecast Public Artworks, which offers grants to artists, provides facilitation services to communities and publishes the national journal Public Art Review (www.publicartreview.org).

music into some of his compositions. Whitney stressed that some of the credit for the program’s success goes to students who have already graduated.

“We are in the position we are now because the fine work done by the previous choir has been recognized and rewarded,” she said. “The kids, past and present, are fantastic.”

Members of the Conno Park High School choir will perform at the St. Anthony Park Arts Festival on Saturday, June 5 at 11 a.m. Anyone interested in contributing to the choir’s Carnegie Hall trip should contact Carol Whitney at the school (293-8200).

Clearly it is a good thing.

The group described their experience playing together as “nurturing,” "dynamic,” "fun.”

Butler added, “We like each other. We don’t just rehearse music when we get together, we share life.”

That emotional solidarity is evident in the frequent sharing of hugs. As Krugler noted, “There is tension and ego. But a sense of humor helps us get through it.”

It is also clear that the women are serious about their music. During rehearsal, songs are frequently interrupted to discuss how to improve harmonies and the complexities of fitting five parts of a song together.

In Krugler’s words, "We try things a million different ways. It is a slow, organic process.”

The music they play is eclectic. “We’re all in our mid-40’s, and the music reflects our tastes,” said Krugler.

But, Porter added, “nothing is off limits. Everything is fair game.”

The way this plays out is fairly simple: They find songs they like and then learn how to play them.

During rehearsal, Kate Wolz’s “Great Divide” had the singers digging through their shoulder bags for various percussion instruments to emphasize the upbeat rhythm of the song.

Later, the instruments were set aside when they practiced an a cappella piece based on a poem by Khalil Gibran, with music by Yaye Barnwell of Sweet Honey in the Rock.

The Mamas accept tips during performances and have donated that money to various causes such as Habitat for Humanity, Neighbors for Peace and the Linnea Home.

They have several performances scheduled in coming weeks. On June 5, they’ll be at the St. Anthony Park Arts Festival, performing at 10 a.m. That night at 8 p.m., they’ll be at the Riverview Cafe in Minneapolis. The Mamas will also be featured performers at the St. Anthony Park July 4th celebration.

What's New at 2190 Como Avenue

The remodeling and new construction project at 2190 Como Avenue is nearing completion. You should know...

Architron, an architectural firm, is our newest tenant. They have remodeled and moved into the old State Farm office. Phillip Broussard, a neighborhood resident, is the principal. Stop by and welcome them, and see their new space.

WELCOME ARCHITRON!

Jim Roehrenbach and his State Farm Insurance office are still here, but have relocated to the new building behind the old building you've seen on the corner of Knapp Place and Como Avenue for more than 80 years. Just go up the new ramp!

Park Press and The Bugle still have their office here as well. The "drop box" for ads is on the Knapp Place side of the building.

Falcon Heights writer looks at life, love, war

by Lisa Steinmamm

Though she would doubtless blush at the label, Falcon Heights author Sovie Solomon Apple deserves the label "living community treasure." We could adapt the term from the Japanese, who have a law to protect the nation's unique arts and crafts and who designate some artisans as "living national treasures." Apple, who recently turned 90, is a writer of stories that are important cultural property. Her long and interesting life, her ability as a story teller, her attitude and her love for life—all make her someone to be treasured.

Apple's most recent book, "Consequence of Choice in Life, Love and War," published in 2003 by Vantage Press, weaves together fact and fiction in a story that spans the generations she has lived through herself. "Consequence" tells the story of a family line that begins in Poland during World War I. Through great hardship, the Varnav family escapes war-torn Europe and eventually finds a measure of peace and happiness in Madison, Wisconsin.

But war overshadows their lives again when Serena Warner (her name now Americanized) meets and marries Max, who is sent to fight in World War II shortly after their wedding. The book paints in detail what life was like for women like Serena and her friends in the Midwest while their husbands were at war. They worked in jobs formerly held by men they rationed and sacrificed for the war effort. Apple does not shy away from the painful loneliness and worry these women suffered while their husbands were away.

After the war, Apple sees her characters through the painful reuniting of lives torn apart by separation. Eventually Serena and Max are reunited and raise a family. The book ends with the couple celebrating their 25th wedding anniversary and reflecting on the past. They also ponder the future as their own son marries and is then drafted into service during the Vietnam War.

Apple's book draws heavily from her own experiences and those lives she has observed.

She grew up in St. Paul in a close-knit Jewish community on the West Side. In the late 1920s and early 1930s, in what she describes as "a tragic part of our history," the community was displaced to facilitate large-scale development.

Many of those families moved into the part of St. Paul now known as Highland Park. Apple graduated from high school and then got married in 1936. She and her husband moved to Duluth and had two children. Her career as a sales manager took them to St. Louis during WWII. There Apple opened her own women's clothing store, Sueko-Q.

The family returned to the Twin Cities after 10 years in St. Louis. Apple continued to work in women's clothing retail, managing Eaton's Dress Shop on St. Peter Street in downtown St. Paul during the 1960s.

"At the time, it was a wonderful shopping area, some of the finest stores," Apple remembers. "Then the malls came in."

Apple feared the malls would affect business downtown. Her boss dismissed her concerns, claiming "the malls will never work; no one will go shopping on Sundays."

In 1965 Apple visited Europe. She was unable to visit Russia or Rumania, where her parents and grandparents were from, but she went to Britain and the continent.

She kept a journal, as she has through much of her life, and preserved the details of her travels through 10 countries.

When she returned, she continued to work at Eaton's, but by the early 1970s the stores on St. Peter were closing.

Both of her children were now married. Apple asked herself: "What am I going to do?" At age 68, she decided to pursue a lifelong dream to attend college, enrolling at the University of Minnesota in English and the humanities. "I never felt awkward," she explains. "I met some wonderful young people. I got good grades. I listened. I learned a lot."

Perhaps best of all, Apple received encouragement from a teacher to put her writing into a book. She worked on her first book while caring for her husband, who was sick at home.

"I'd write while he slept and then read it to him the next morning," she says.

The result was Apple's family history, "They Were Strangers," published in 1995.

Her latest book was the result of Apple's concerns with world events. She follows the news avidly and frequently discusses it with her granddaughter, Stacy, who lives nearby and who encouraged her to write another book so she could share her life experiences.

"The war in Iraq is not going well," she says, adding that she worries about anti-Semitism and that too many people are complacent.

There are still important choices to be made, she believes. "I won't be here, but my children and grandchildren will. What kind of world will it be? What will our choices be?"

Sovie Apple's books are available at Border's Bookstores or through Vantage Press (1-800-882-5273).
Abhh . . . Spring is in the air. The warm breezes, the rainy nights and sun-filled days, the trees in full green, the smell of lilacs.

Consider yourself lucky to enjoy daffodils, tulips and dogwood. Most dinosaurs never saw these beautiful plants.

Flowering plants (otherwise known as angiosperms) are the most recent group of plants to evolve. They didn't show up until most dinosaurs had already gone extinct.

The first flowering plants appeared in the middle of the Cretaceous period (99-127 million years ago), near the end of the long reign of dinosaurs on earth.

By then, duckbilled dinosaurs, horned dinosaurs and big theropods related to Tyrannosaurus rex were living in the United States. The angiosperms were the answer to dinosaur dreams!

Unlike gymnosperms, such as evergreens and pine trees, angiosperms distribute their seeds within fruit, which is a lot safer than the "bare seed" method of gymnosperms.

They also have a rapid life cycle, which means they are easily replantable. Once a dinosaur took a nibble, another shoot could have grown back relatively quickly.

All these specialized features mean that flowering plants could support a greater number of herbivores than the gymnosperm forests of old.

Some scientists have even suggested that grazing by dinosaurs may have selected for plants that had the characteristics of flowering plants. In other words, dinosaurs and flowering plants might have evolved in concert with one another.

Many of the large-bodied dinosaurs, like the duckbilled hadrosaurs, had specialized teeth for grinding or shearing, which allowed them to break food down in their mouths before swallowing.

This unique adaptation is suggested as a great example of the effect that new, flowering food sources might have had on dinosaur biology.

Other scientists wonder if hay fever might have done the dino in. They hypothesize that during the rapid diversification of flowering plants, dinosaurs might have (1) had trouble digesting those new plants, (2) been poisoned by the plants' newly developing toxins, or (3) starved themselves to death because of the higher volume of pollen in the air.

These suggestions are unscientific, meaning that they are untestable since we can't travel back to the Cretaceous to see what the dinosaurs really thought of those angiosperms.

In addition, we have good records of flowering plants and know that they appeared millions of years before the large-bodied dinosaurs got wiped out 65 million years ago. There is no evidence that their pollen or any other "poisons" killed the dinosaurs.

In addition, at the same time the dino went extinct, many other ecosystems also took big hits. Lots of creatures living in the sea went extinct too, and we can't blame those extinctions on angiosperms.

In fact, at the same time that dinosaurs and many of their sedia-dwelling cohort went extinct, so did a lot of land plants—all land plants except ferns show a dramatic decline in diversity.

How could pollen or plants have wiped out dinosaurs, if many of those organisms were affected too?

Instead, it is more likely that angiosperms helped sustain a new breed of specialized dinosaurs, and that grazing by dinosaurs might have influenced angiosperm diversity.

In fact, you could almost say that dinosaurs helped "invent" flowers. So thanks, dinosaurs, for all of our lilacs. Spring just wouldn't be the same without them.

My baby was born under the sign of Water.

I wanted the best birth experience possible for my baby and me. Naturally, that included a midwife and water birth. St. Joseph's Maternity Care Center offers many different options, including water birth tubs for midwife-attended births. It was a great experience. Just ask my little swimmer!

I'm glad I chose St. Joe's.

Artist Lisa Elias and her son, Oliver, try out "Forged Roots," Lisa's contribution to new sculptural seating areas along University Avenue.

Bus benches brighten boulevard of broken dreams

by Dave Healy

University Avenue ain't what it used to be.

Once the umbilical cord between the Twin Cities, the Avenue has been an also-ran ever since I-94 first flashed its multi-lane miracle. Now the thoroughfare is at best just fair as a way to get from here to there. And it don't look so hot either.

But that's changing. Lately all kinds of people are interested in what Steve Cannon used to call "the boulevard of broken dreams." A planned pharmacy at the Snelling Avenue intersection prompted spirited debate about what kind of design would fit the character of University. Who knew the Avenue had character?

The recent addition of two "adult-themed" establishments on either side of Snelling has led to similar discussions, as have suggestions on how to redevelop the Lexington intersection.

Suddenly, University Avenue is hot. Why. There's even an organization, University United, that's devoted to development along the Avenue.

University, hats off to that! To your colors true we will ever be.

A recent null in the coffin of University's dowdy reputation is the completion of four bus benches—excuse me—four "sculptural seating projects." Two of these were installed last year: Marcia McE achrinos' "Out of the Woods" at Fairview Avenue, and Al Wadzinski's "Red Alert," a block west of there.

The other two projects were just completed: "Sibling Rivalry" by Jean Fress-Kluth, located at Pinor Avenue, and Lisa Elias' "Forged Roots" at Raymond Avenue.

Their installation was celebrated on May 18 with a shuttle-bus tour of all four benches and remarks by Mayors Randy Kelly, Ward 4 City Council Member Jay Bazar, St. Anthony Park Bank President Rick Beason and Forecast Public Artsworks Executive Director Jack Boker.

Forecast coordinated the project, selecting the artists who designed the benches and finding locations for their placement along University. St. Anthony Park Bank was a major funder.

Your standard-issue bus bench is a pretty unimaginative piece of furniture. University Avenue's new sculptural seating projects, on the other hand, represent a glorious melding of form, function and fun—just the ticket to refurbish an aging avenue and encourage a gridlock-weary populace to get on the bus.

Six murals under the Hwy. 280 bridge in south St. Anthony Park were the work of a mystery artist who grew up in the neighborhood but wants to remain anonymous.

Anne Clausen helps install “Boundaries,” an artwork created by her mother, Barb Clausen, at Lauderdale City Hall.

Art and politics tied up with a pink ribbon

by Judy Woodward

Contested property lines can pit neighbor against neighbor, tear friendships asunder, and create new, unlikely alliances among those who have only their grievance in common. Boundary disputes can become obsessive, time-consuming and expensive.

But there’s something they generally don’t become, and that is the stuff of art.

Barb Clausen is out to change all that.

Clausen belongs to a group of Lauderdale residents that is suing the city of Lauderdale over a seven-and-a-half-foot-wide strip of land that lies between their back yards and an adjoining municipal park.

The city says the land belongs to them. Clausen and her neighbors have gone to court to prove the opposite.

But Clausen isn’t merely leaving things in the hands of the lawyers. An artist with an interest in outdoor installations that challenge the notion of the “art object as a consumer product,” Clausen saw the opportunity to inject a playful postmodern spirit into the dispute.

Her first effort involved wrapping the Lauderdale City Hall in exactly 378 feet (the precise length of the contested strip of land) of pink surveyor’s tape, imprinted with assorted concepts intended to draw attention to the concept of shifting boundaries—in land use as in life.

“In the City’s lawyer lingo,” read one. “Its eminent domain a tool of oppression?” asked another.

Not surprisingly, said Clausen, the city failed to grasp the aesthetic possibilities inherent in this jeu d’esprit.

Clausen, whose gentle ironic manner radiates a kind of deceptive innocence, explained what happened when she and a few like-minded helpers decided to turn City Hall into an objet d’art.

“We did it on a Saturday,” said Clausen, “because we didn’t want to be arrested and we didn’t want to think about blocking the sidewalk. But then somebody called the police.”

By the time an officer showed up, the installation was complete and Clausen’s allies were in the midst of photographing the pink-embellished City Hall. She smiled reminiscently.

“The policeman and I had this interesting discussion about the meaning of art. I said that we were making art. He said that it looked like litter to him.”

Uniformed police officers aren’t generally noted for their

4-H News
by Bobby Nagornom
I’m going to start with news about the pig show. This event is held in the St. Anthony Park Bank Drive-in parking lot (by Speedy). It’s a totally radical time as you socialize with neighbors and friends. The Community Band plays, and the 4-H Club serves pie, brownies, ice cream cones, lemonade and coffee. It costs just a small amount but it adds up for 4-H, and it’s our club’s only fundraiser. Plus, you can meet your radical 4-H reporter, for I will be there. Don’t miss the pig show on Friday, June 4 at 7 p.m.

Now for our meeting. We started with roll call. We answered with what we’re looking forward to this summer. We talked about IFYE bags, and I think we reached our goal. We’re so radical. The bags will be sent loaded with school supplies to poor families in Africa, where you must have a bag to go to school.

We also talked about the County Fair. Besides projects, 4-H members can do either “Share the Fur” (a short ski) or a banner promoting 4-H. We decided to do both. If we win, we’ll also be at the State Fair. We also voted on officers: President: Linnea Vice president: Amanda Recreation leader: Laurel Historian: Keith Treasurer: Adam Secretary: Josephine Reporter: Me (re-elected). You’ll still be reading my radical! While enjoying our snack (root beer float) we had two demonstrations: Keith talked about his dog and how he takes care of him. Anne described how to make a pillow. Thanks for reading my report. Sorry about not putting in last names, but I don’t know everyone’s last name, and it wouldn’t be fair to put them in only for some. See you at the pie social!

This is a great time of year in St. Anthony Park. Our kids are excited about finishing another year of school and beginning their summer adventures. We all enjoy the chance to pack away the projects and work in the yard, or stroll in shortsleeves or dine outside. Nothing says summer to me more than watching neighbors catch up and enjoy the outdoor festivites.

Three weeks ago, my world turned upside down when my doctor said, "The biopsy is positive." (I had gone to the doctor thinking I had an ulcer.)

A week later, I got another jolt from the surgeon: "It's a level IllC malignancy." (a relatively advanced form of cancer,) and we couldn't get it all.

And suddenly, I couldn't manage my life. I had to send my youngest child to stay with a friend while I healed from my surgery. I had to ask people for help with everything.

Everything! Me, the person who always helps everyone else. Me, the one who always had it under control.

Never have I understood so well why people don't always welcome Block Nurse services into their lives with open arms. It is so hard to be the person who needs help rather than the person who can give it.

Without warning, constant pain and a whole new vocabulary, with words like "chemotherapy," became my daily life.

I found a video at the library called "Wig Hair Day" and watched it with my children. It depicted three women undergoing treatment for a somewhat milder form of cancer than I have been diagnosed with. They all went through treatments and survived, but it also was clear that there were those who didn't survive.

But one thing miraculous about the whole awful ordeal (and I can't truly describe it as anything less) has been the support, care and assistance from everyone I know. I mean everyone—people at work, neighbors, my friends.

It got to the point for a few days there where I was so overwhelmed by the outpouring of concern that I couldn't open my mouth to talk to anyone without beginning to cry.

I have never felt such overwhelming waves of what can only be called love. Not the lovey-dovey kind, but the kind that gives you a ride to the hospital in the middle of the night or takes care of your child for two weeks.

And as much as I hate to be sick, and as much as I want to live, I am not sure that I could have experienced this if I had not become as I am. I can't possibly let this disease win without the toughest fight I can give it. Too many people are holding my hand!

The St. Anthony Park Block Nurse is interested in your ideas and opinions about health and safety topics for all of us as we get older. If you have comments or suggestions, please contact us at 642-9052 or saxtonpb@bloomnet.net.

Mary Anne Lindsay

Mary Anne Lindsay, a 44-year resident of St. Anthony Park, died April 24, 2004 at Bethel Care Center in St. Paul. She was 78.

Mary Anne, her husband Robert, and their children Phyllis and Nancy lived on Hythe and Chelmsford Streets, and Commonwealth and Hillside Avenues before purchasing a home on Hillside Court in 1966.

Mary Anne Phillips was born in Red Wing, Minnesota, and lived in nearby Wabasha. After her father died, her family moved to Madison, Wisconsin, where she later trained and practiced as a nurse. There she married University of Wisconsin teacher and broadcaster Bob Lindsay and had their children.

When Bob was hired by the University of Minnesota, they moved to St. Paul. The quality of education at St. Anthony Park Elementary drove the couple's decision to settle in that neighborhood. By now a full-time mother and homemaker, Mary Anne occasionally did private duty care for area neighbors.

In 1968 Mary Anne, Bob and Nancy lived in Paris for a year. After both children left home, Mary Anne joined her husband on numerous journeys, visiting 40 countries on five continents.

She enjoyed meeting diverse people and gathered her stories to be prepared at Hillside Court dinner gatherings. Her friends included foreign students, distinguished academics and professionals, and a prime minister. In an Ivory Coast preserve a baboon once joined her for an impromptu walk.

Mary Anne loved reading, claiming to have read all the books in St. Anthony Park's library. She and Bob then started on the collection at Ramsey County's Roseville branch.

When Bob died in 1993, Mary Anne focused on her home, her children and their spouses. Mary and Michael. Medical complications nearly ended her life in 2000, but she rallied and lived actively and with good humor, becoming friends with many of her caregivers.

After learning to use an e-mail device, she decided to "go online," buying a laptop computer just after her 78th birthday.

Mary Anne is survived by her children and their spouses.

JUNE 2004 / PARK BUGLE / SAINT ANTHONY PARK ARTS FESTIVAL

"As a farm kid from a big family where we all shared the work and shared what they had, this came naturally," she said. "I have no urge to keep the stuff I make. The process is great. I just love making stuff and sharing it."

Pass is both philosophical and practical about the business end of art. "You have to ask yourself, what kind of atmosphere works for you? I want to make what I want to, and I don’t want it to be work. So when I get a call, say from a gallery, I usually decline. I don’t want this to be work. I don’t want to mass produce or create things according to someone else’s requirements."

Art vs. craft? Pass would rather blur than sharpen that line.

"My only guideline is that I need a reason for creating a piece. It must be user-friendly. Pleasing the eyes is fine but it has to be useful. The noble cup has a higher order to fill in that it has to appeal to the senses—touch, taste and look. That’s a tall order but I believe I can do it."
