Falcon Heights family finds basement treasure
by Jay Weiner

The letter was sent by Gail Sheehan Liedl, and it went on to make a strange request. Liedl grew up in the Hoyt Avenue house that the Bejaranos live in, and she remembered her family hiding a time capsule in the basement in 1958. Now, 50 years later, she found herself wondering if it was still there.

Completed Grand Rounds seen as threat to nearby wetlands

By Peg Maggie

It isn’t likely that those driving the lanes of the proposed Grand Rounds Missing Link – a 3.5-mile extension of the existing parkway – will see much of the proposed route. But the Kasha-Bozeman wetlands, one of the last remnants of the 19th-century Kasota basin, is a place of which they will be privy, as it will be swept by the 850-projected acres of the parkway.

Joseph Ruskin of the Minneapolis Parks and Recreation Board (MPRB) press office explained that the parkway is not expected to “impact the wetlands in any way.” Ruskin points to a resolution passed by the Park Board in the 1980s that defined the Kasota Ponds as a natural area and a part of the missing link.

Ruskin is not alone in seeing the wetlands as a sacrifice by the Missing Link. "I do want this missing link to be completed," said RPB member Henry Peterson, who is also a member of the executive committee of the St. Anthony Park opposition. "We understand the middle Mississippi watershed. Ponds, said to comprise the last remnants of the 19th-century Kasota basin, are places of which they will be privy, as it will be swept by the 850-projected acres of the parkway.

When someone judges the odds in a game of chuck, looking for a cue to the subtle quirks of human nature or to the subconscious. Is the outcome of the game under your control? Is the game a fair one? Is the game affected by external forces? Yet, in the end, we must accept the results. We must accept the outcome as it is. The game is not our creation; it is a product of our world, of our society, of our times. We can influence its outcome, but we cannot control it.

So, when we play a game, we must accept the outcome as it is. We must accept the results of our actions. We must accept the consequences of our decisions. We must accept the outcome as it is. The game is not our creation; it is a product of our world, of our society, of our times. We can influence its outcome, but we cannot control it.

The unintended consequence was the traffic on the road. The road was closed, and the traffic was backed up. The road was closed for a reason, but the traffic was not. The road was closed for a reason, but the traffic was not.

The world will not grind to a halt in the face of a minor annoyance. The world will not grind to a halt in the face of a minor annoyance. It will adapt, it will adjust, it will move on. The world will not grind to a halt in the face of a minor annoyance. It will adapt, it will adjust, it will move on.

Someone asking "Who says you have to run the bases in order?" is a spectator, is a player, is a coach, is a fan. They are all important, they are all necessary, they are all needed. They are all important, they are all necessary, they are all needed.

Fuel source decision for Rock-Tenn appears closer

By Anne Holzman

The St. Paul Port Authority expects to report in early August the results of its study of possible fuel sources for the Rock-Tenn steam plant, which it has been trying to close for years.

A September 2007 letter from Rep. Erin Murphy to the Port Authority's advisory panel noted that the panel "has the right to submit its recommendation to the City Council." The panel, organized by the Port Authority, includes a citizen panel, to be advisory panel noted that the citizens can respond to the recommendations as well. A study timeline posted at RCAP's Web site suggests City Council review of the Port Authority's recommendations will be posted there when the panel receives them. Documents are also on file at public libraries near the Rock-Tenn plant, including the St. Anthony Park branch. Documents used by the panel to draw financing priorities, clearly supporting a foundation of renewal.

Jay Weiner's column

historical perspective:

The Minnesota Olympic Committee and I where combined in 1988. Our path will cross again in 2008. This time, the Minnesota Olympic Committee will have to choose a new leader. I am confident that a new leader will step up and continue the work.

After the Rochester Salmon River disaster, the Minnesota Olympic Committee was forced to work with the state's entire community. The committee was able to raise $1.5 million for the Rochester Salmon River disaster. This was a significant achievement, and the committee is proud of the work that was done.

As the Minnesota Olympic Committee moves forward, I urge everyone to join in and support the program. The Minnesota Olympic Committee is committed to helping athletes reach their full potential. We are looking forward to the future and to working with everyone to achieve success.

This is what I call a one氡two-second interval. It's a time when I think about the things that are incredibly tense, but then the very next thing in rowing as "the races that are incredibly tense, but then you have certain benchmarks that you win." One such memory was when I got there, the "it helped to have a brother, but I'm very grateful for him." New art business opens in Milton Square

By Dave Healy

Kara O'Brien has been teaching art classes for 18 years. She's also a textile artist specializing in batik, and when she was looking for new studio space, she discovered that a 18,000-square-foot building had recently come on the market in St. Anthony Park's Milton Square. This offered her a great opportunity to follow her artistic passion.

O'Brien has been teaching workshops for parents and children as well as sessions for adults. At the grand opening, visitors learned how to make their own sidewalk chalk. "With Art Riot, I'll have a school that will accommodate kids and parents," O'Brien said.

In addition to parties, Art Riot offers art classes in the classrooms where parties and displays her own work, as well as Textile Studio, where O'Brien creates her own items. Her work includes scarves, pillows, purses, and other items. She also makes mobiles or Egyptian-themed objects for special events.

Basement treasure from 1 thinking about local history, and somehow that triggered a memory of our time capsule," said Sheehan.

The Hoyt Avenue house was built in 1941, and the Sheehans—Gail, brother Patrick, sister Janet, and parents Mylon and Lucille—lived there from 1949 to 1989. The Bejaranos have owned the house since 1992.

The Bejarano children—Eric, 10, and Caroline, 7—were especially interested in the Wards catalog, where the pictures and prices prompted many questions.

Jerome Liedl was intrigued with the baseball cards, which included several of baseball executives. Liz Bejarano was taken with an Air Express schedule that included times of passenger flights between Minneapolis/St. Paul and Mankato.

Although conversation included the speculation that some of the time capsule contents might be valuable, the Bejaranos seemed uninterested in pursuing that topic. Instead, they're already making plans to add some things of their own and return the capsule to its basement hiding place.

“So,” said Steve Bejarano to Eric and Caroline, “in 50 years you'll have to write a letter to whoever is living here then and tell them about that wall to the right of the doorway down in the vegetable room.”

LIVES LIVED
Ellen (O'Connor) Dickson,
2100 Hillside Avenue
Formerly of St. Anthony Park and
Murray, Arizona
Died June 20, 2008
at the age of 81.
She was a fighter," her husband, Jim Dickson, said. "She just refused to let it get her down."

Dickson was able to teach at three universities.
She obtained her doctorate in public health and was part of a groundbreaking cohort class in the 1970s.
Dickson graduated from Colorado in Boulder, focusing on women's health and social policy to graduate students at Hamline and St. Mary's universities.

Dickson described as a natural teacher who fulfilled her dream when she taught at the University of Minnesota in the early 1960s. Her interest in health care and the health care industry led her to obtain her master's degree in health care administration from Texas Women's University in Dallas.

In 1979 after they met at a pottery class, Ellen and Jim Dickson married. They attended Murray High School. Jim Dickson joined the Twin Cities in the early 1990s, and they taught together as the head of the School of Pharmacy and later as part of the groundbreaking cohort class in the 1970s.

After moving to Denver, she attended the University of Colorado in 1980.
