Debate resumes over Cleveland parking

In brief

In an effort to ease congestion and improve convenience for pedestrians and bicyclists, a coalition of Falcon Heights and St. Anthony Park residents is pursuing the removal of parking restrictions on Cleveland Avenue. The coalition, known as the Cleveland Avenue Transportation Task Force, is working on a proposal to remove parking restrictions in the area surrounding the intersection of Cleveland Avenue and Buford Street.

Study of Sholom Home reuse options underway

By Roger Bergerson

The fate of the Sholom Home site in the Como Park neighborhood is being studied by a committee appointed by the St. Anthony Park Community Council. The committee will investigate possible reuse options for the property, which includes a historic building known as the Sholom Home East.

Chuck Solberg's double life

By Jeff Woodrow

Chuck Solberg is a potter by day and a blues musician by night. He runs a pottery studio event at 2402 University Ave. on Nov. 21 and 22. Visitors will get a chance to see what Solberg has been working on during the daylight hours when he holds his annual sale this month.

St. Anthony Park Community Council to publish directory

By Dave Healy

Is there still room for a paper directory in an online world? The St. Anthony Park Community Council thinks so, and they're betting neighborhood residents will agree. Early next year, the council will publish a directory of local residents and businesses that, in organizer Mary Hamel's words, is "a way to facilitate neighborliness."

Hamel said the committee working on a fundraising project for the council asked themselves if a print directory would still be practical now that many people access addresses and phone numbers online.

"We decided that for a neighborhood directory, it's nice to be able to pick something up and take a look at it," she said. "In addition to finding a specific piece of information you're looking for, you might notice other things that help give you a better overall feel for where you live."

The directory will be an "opt-in" document, meaning that only people who sign up will be in it. Participants will receive a free copy, and only a limited number of directories will be for sale. The directory will include residents, businesses, a map and a list of community resources. Entries for residents will list name, address, phone number(s) and e-mail address.

Printing and mailing costs will be covered by advertising from local businesses. Any profit will go to the St. Anthony Park Community Council. Hamel said the allocation the council receives from the city hasn't increased in at least seven years, but costs have.

"This is a way to help support a vital resource in our community," she said. Hamel said her committee will send invitations to the people on their mailing list, but that accounts for only about a third of the neighborhood's residents.

"We want as many people as possible to participate," she said. "The more people who are in the directory, the more useful it will be."

Any resident who does not receive a form in the mail can use the one printed below. Besides returning a paper form, residents can register online at www.sapcc.org. Forms can be mailed in or left at one of three drop sites: Micawber's, The Little Wine Shoppe or the Hampden Park Co-op. The deadline for signing up is Dec. 6.

101 years ago the red band of pilot and the green band of observer of the Wright Flyer took to the skies. From that moment on, human designers have been taking to the skies in greater numbers. But today, the Wright Flyer and the Wright brothers are part of a rich history of human flight, a history that continues to shape our world in ways that are both significant and complex.

Dara Sanders Dokas
Micawber's Bookstore

Why books?
I'm an author, so it goes without saying that I love books.

Why here?
I live in St. Anthony Park, so I was already familiar with Micawber's before I started working here. In fact, I had been doing some informal consulting with the store about children's books, which is my specialty, before I was hired to work in the store.

Where from?
I lived in St. Anthony Park until I was in fourth grade, when my family moved to Michigan. I moved back to the neighborhood as an adult and have lived in our present house for 13 years.

Who else?
My co-workers at Micawber's are Tom Bielenberg, Hans Weyandt and Karen Reither. At home I live with my husband, Paul, and my daughter, Juliana, who's in fifth grade.

What else?
I'm a former English and drama teacher at St. Paul Open School and Mounds Park Academy. And I'm a writer. I've published one book, "Remembering Mama," and I have a new one, "Muriel's Red Sweater," coming out in February.

The hockey program — a group of parents who coach the hockey teams, raise money for uniforms and additional donations, keep the brush in good condition, and maintain the hockey rink — is a beloved sport with a strong place all winter.

The rink and the rec center, which serves as the warming house, are the hub for community activities that take place all winter. The ice rink at Langford Park, are an easy after-school wonderland. The rinks, located on the south end of Langford Park in St. Anthony Park, are well-maintained and a great place to enjoy the outdoors.

If you're planning an international trip, Arlo Auch has a message for you: "We can beat the Internet." "We" is A Wide World of Travel (WWT), the Como Park business Auch and his wife, Judith, have operated for 15 years. And by beating the Internet, Auch is referring to travel-related Web sites that enable people to shop for tickets and accommodations online.

Auch said that for domestic trips, it's hard for travel agents to compete with Travelocity, Expedia, Orbitz and the like. But he said that when it comes to arranging international travel, "it doesn't make sense to do it yourself." That's because WWT has access to airfare wholesalers who offer rates that don't get publicized to online businesses, Auch said. And, he added, buying a ticket online doesn't leave you with any assistance if something goes wrong.

"If we book it, we'll troubleshoot any problems that might develop," he said. "When complications emerge, it's nice to have an advocate." Auch said that an experienced travel agent can head off some problems by knowing what's going on in the industry. He pointed to Sun Country's recent troubles, resulting from a federal investigation of the airline's parent company, Petters Group, as an example of how important it is to stay abreast of the latest developments.

The Auchs bring a wealth of personal experience to their business. They've traveled extensively themselves, and they lived in Europe for several years. They started WWT 32 years ago while living in Colorado and continued the business after moving to Minnesota.

Another branch of the business, World of Travel, deals exclusively with groups. For example, Auch said, they handle all the trips for the Minnesota Baptist Conference, which is based in Arden Hills.

The Como Avenue location focuses on tours and cruises. Auch said that WWT encourages potential travelers to think about organizing their own group. By becoming a "pied piper," an individual or couple can sometimes travel for free.

"You don't have to be famous to lead a tour," he said. "You might be able to get enough people just by convincing extended family members to travel together. And you don't have to do anything other than come up with the group. We'll take care of everything else."

Henderson's book, "Birds in Flight: The Art and Science of How Birds Fly," is available for $25.00. It provides a fascinating explanation of why birds fly in V formations and how they are able to do so. Henderson's book also covers the different types of birds and their wing designs, as well as their flight patterns and how they are able to stay in place.

Henderson's book is well-researched and presents a clear explanation of how birds are able to fly. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the art and science of birds.

Henderson's book is available for purchase through various online retailers or at bookstores. It is also available in digital format. The book is 160 pages long and covers a wide range of topics related to birds and their flight.

Henderson's book is a valuable resource for anyone interested in birds and their flight. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the art and science of birds.

It may seem like a page from a book, but Bergerson found that the real stories, the ones that mattered, were those that weren't written down. The decision to embark on a book about the Curtiss airplanes in Minnesota was a personal one, but it's one that he hopes will inspire others to explore the history of their own communities.

Bergerson, a Como Park resident, was interested in aviation and the history of Curtiss airplanes. He was particularly drawn to the story of the Curtiss airplanes in Minnesota, which were used for training during World War I. The airport where they were based, Curtiss Northwest Airport, is now known as the St. Paul International Airport.

Bergerson's book tells the story of the airfield from 1919 to 1930, and how it played a role in the early days of aviation in Minnesota. It's a story that was waiting to be explored, and one that Bergerson says was both exciting and challenging to write.

"It was a fascinating story," he says. "But it was also a difficult task at all."

Bergerson says he learned a lot about writing his book from different sources, including interviews with residents of the area, and by analyzing photographs. He found that the availability of a wealth of photographs was a bonus.

"The subject material got me excited," he says. "I knew that this was a story that was waiting to be told."

Bergerson hopes to schedule some book signings in the area, and he's established a Web site for the book.

"I'm excited to share this story with others," he says. "It's a story that I think will interest readers of all ages."
In 1920, a second hangar was built at Curtiss Northwest.
